INTRODUCTION.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS, the second volume of the Calendar of Documents relating to Scotland, preserved among the Public Records of England, embraces the entire reign of Edward I.,—a period full of events of great importance in the history of the two countries,—beginning with the last years of the peaceful and beneficent reign of Alexander III., and ending while the two nations were engaged, one for conquest and the other for independence, in the arduous struggle which, after many vicissitudes, was to end in firmly seating Robert Bruce on the vacant throne of his ancestors.

The reign of Edward I., so far as it relates to Scotland, may be divided into six periods—the last thirteen years of the reign of Alexander III., five of the nominal reign of Margaret of Norway, the two years' Interregnum during the Competition for the Crown, John Balliol's disastrous four years' reign, the second Interregnum of ten years, and lastly, the short period from the coronation of Robert Bruce till the death of Edward I.

Beginning then with Alexander III., we shall find that the documents calendared fully bear out the character assigned to him by Lord Hailes :—‘ His conduct towards the neighbouring kingdom was uniformly candid and wise. He maintained that amity with England which interest as well as relation to its sovereigns required ; yet he never submitted to any concessions

Edward I. 'Church of Scotland.'
(Alex. III.)

The first document¹ is a remonstrance by him as to encroachments on his rights in his Cumberland manors, addressed to Eleanor Queen of Henry III., who is called 'the late,' some rumour of his death having doubtless reached Scotland, though that event did not occur till 16th November, nearly seven months after the date of the letter, 22nd April 1272. As will be noticed from many other documents,² the privileges of the Kings of Scotland in these and their Tynedale possessions were grudgingly admitted, and closely watched by their brother sovereigns. On 27th August 1274, Edward I. issued a writ³ commanding 175*l.* to be paid to his royal brother-in-law from the issues of Durham, for the stated expenses of 100*s.* daily, allowed of old to the Scottish kings coming to the English Court; in this instance the cost of his attending the coronation at Westminster. Soon after, in Michaelmas Term⁴ the same year, Edward ordered the Barons of Exchequer to ascertain what balance was due to Alexander of his consort Queen Margaret's dower of 5000*l.*, that it might be settled. There is nothing to show, however, that it was ever paid.⁵ After above twenty-four years of married life, Queen Margaret died at the comparatively early age of thirty-five on 26th February 1274-75.⁶ Her grace and beauty are still the subjects of Scottish tradition. Only three weeks before her death she had obtained from her brother a special favour for Elizabeth de Quincy Countess of Buchan, who was in an interesting situation, releasing her from personal attendance before him to receive her share of her father's heritage.⁷ This loss made no change in the friendly relations between the brothers-in-law. Alexander continued to maintain his own public rights, as well as those of his subjects. He was in the custom of making journeys through his kingdom to see that justice was administered; and thus we find him, from

Elgin, on 15th August 1275,¹ urging the release of a vessel and her crew, belonging to Alexander of Argyll, arrested at Bristol on suspicion of piracy; from Stirling, on 24th October thereafter, informing Edward I., in answer to the latter's complaint regarding pirates,² that they would be judged according to Scottish laws; from Roxburgh, on 14th November after,³ asking the English King's favour in the business of Alexander the Steward,—whose case (rather a complicated one) is stated by himself to Edward I. in singular terms,⁴ ending with a familiar proverb; and lastly, from Brechin, 29th December,⁵ as to an aid demanded by Edward within Tynedale, on which the Scottish King says he must advise with his magnates. A document without date, evidently of the same year,⁶ sums up his demands, with Edward's replies. His mother, Mary de Coucy the Queen Dowager, appears about this time, on one occasion on pilgrimage to Canterbury (24th February 1275–76);⁷ at another, crossing seas⁸ (26th December 1276). The next year or two saw much correspondence between the Sovereigns on the subject of Scottish encroachments on the March between their kingdoms at Tweedmouth near Berwick,⁹ of which the Bishop of Durham had complained as an infringement on his liberty of Norhamschyre. Lord Hailes remarks¹⁰ that the subject of these solemn negotiations was probably nothing more than a salmon fishery. It may, however, have been some matter of greater moment. Berwick-on-Tweed was then a place of great commerce. The *Chronicle of Lanercost*¹¹ calls it a second Alexandria; its merchants and their extensive transactions appear often in the present Calendar; and few who see it now can realise what it must have been in the time of Alexander III., when many of the greatest ecclesiastics and nobles of Scotland had houses within its walls.

The question of the homage to be rendered by the King of Scotland for the lands and tenements which he held in England forms the next subject of discussion between him and Edward, and after preliminary protests and safe conducts had been

 Edward I. the King of Scotland rendered homage, in respect of these lands, (Alex. III.) at Westminster on 29th September 1278, one of his greatest nobles, Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick, son of the future Competitor, swearing fealty on his behalf.² An instrument on the Patent Rolls, dated on 17th of October, declaring that the King of Scotland offered homage at Tewkesbury the day before, but as Edward had not his Council, he deferred it to London, is somewhat inexplicable. The date is undoubted, as the original is extant as well as the enrolment.³

The Assize Roll of Alexander's justices errant in Tynedale in 1279,⁴ commonly called the 'Iter of Werk,' is a unique example of such a document under the reign of a Scottish king. From the references to earlier rolls of Tynedale in the title deeds of the ancient family of Swinburne of Capheaton,⁵ there must have been others; but all have disappeared with those of Scotland proper. Its chief value is perhaps genealogical, but it also affords evidence of the close similarity of the laws of the two countries at that date.

An inquisition, unfortunately much dilapidated,⁶ reveals a glimpse of the singular law of combat on the Marches called 'Handwarcelle,' whereby the ownership of stolen goods (in this instance a mare) was decided, it does not appear whether by the principals alone or champions in their behalf.

Cognate to this March question is the singular privilege noticed in the inquisition on the death of Baldwin Wake, baron of Lydel,⁷ whereby the men of Roceland and Salom in Scotland had free pasture and right of fowling in the fields of Arthuret in Cumberland; a relic possibly of the days when Cumbria and Strathclyde were under one ruler.

During the period we have been traversing, we see little of the royal children of Scotland. A few of their letters to Edward I., however, are still extant. In the first of these,⁸ Prince Alexander, a boy of sixteen, writes (29th March 1279) in very affectionate terms to his 'most hearty uncle,' asking his favour for Sir Ingram de Umfraville. In another,¹ perhaps a year or two later, he writes expressing equal interest in his uncle's family. In both of these letters he says that, having no seal of his own, he uses that of his guardian, Sir William de St Clair. He appears to have successfully interceded about this time for Nicholas de Veteripont of Tynedale.² The next event in his life was his marriage to the daughter of Guy Count of Flanders, who had a safe conduct for her passage through England on 11th August 1282,³ the marriage taking place doubtless soon after. The Prince is said to have died at Cupar in Fife, on 28th January 1283-84,⁴ shortly after which date the Count sent a suitable escort to conduct his widowed daughter back to her own country.⁵

Only one letter of his sister, Margaret Queen of Norway, appears.⁶ She writes to her uncle in most affectionate terms, and, like her brother having no seal, uses that of her 'chamberere,' Dame Lucy de Hessewelle. She married, a year earlier than her brother, Eric King of Norway;⁷ and though only in her twenty-first year, her husband was seven years her junior.⁸ She preceded her brother to the grave,⁹ leaving an only child Margaret, who, on 5th February, immediately after her uncle's death, was acknowledged by the magnates as heiress of Scotland, in default of issue of her grandfather or his son.¹⁰

Even at this long interval of time, few will read the letter written by the bereaved King to Edward I., on 20th April 1284,¹¹ with its expressions of his overwhelming sorrow and grateful thanks for his brother-in-law's sympathy, without a touch of human feeling. Though in early middle age, having been born in 1241, he had lost wife and children, and being the only son of an only son was without a near male relative to succeed him.

Edward I.
(Alex. III.)

1284-86. He reminds Edward that the heiress apparent of Scotland was an infant girl, and seems to bespeak her granduncle's protection (Edward I. (Alex. III.) for her if needful.

The Scottish King, with prudent foresight, married again, his second consort being Joleta daughter of Robert (IV.) Count of Dreux, the head of a princely house, whose ancestor was Robert called 'the Great,' third son of Louis le Gros King of France.

On 19th August 1285,¹ a safe conduct issues from the English Chancery for herself and her brother John, to go through England to Scotland, and (ominously as it proved) to return within a year.

Long before that year was out the marriage was dissolved² by Alexander's melancholy death on the cliffs between Burntisland and Kinghorn in Fifeshire, where he was thrown from his horse over a precipice (still called the King's Craig) and killed on the spot, on 19th March 1285-86.

With him expired the direct line of the Scoto-Pictish kings, traceable (with one break, the daughter of Malcolm II.) in the male line from Kenneth MacAlpine in the ninth century.³ More than this, the kingdom, which had attained under the wise reigns of his father and himself a high degree of prosperity, was ere long to experience the disastrous effects of civil disorders, retarding its progress for generations.

It will be proper, before going farther, to take notice of the evidences of trade during his reign, for we shall find that these are few and far between during the turmoil of the War of Independence. On 10th November 1273, three merchants of Aberdeen who had freighted a vessel from that port to St Omer with wool, timber, and hides, and had been plundered by Englishmen off Yarmouth and the Kentish Coast,

² Queen Joleta re-married Arthur (II.) Duke of Brittany, by whom she had six children. In a Chronicle cited by Lobineau, Hist. de Bretagne (vol. ii., 362), a daughter, Biancha, is recorded as born to the Duke and his wife Yolandis, 'formerly Queen of Scotland,' in 1300. Joleta or Yolanda brought the county of Montfort into the house of Brittany, and John de Montfort, Duke of Brittany, was her eldest son. L'Art de Verifier les Dates (tom. 11, p. 467; tom. 13, p. 217). There is a curious account of her proceedings after Alexander III.'s death, in the Chronicon de Lanercost, p. 117.

were ordered to have restitution.¹ They had not been satisfied, however, by 28th August 1274, when the constable of the Cinque Ports is ordered to see to it instantly.² A trader of the Lord of Argyll, touching at Bristol and arrested on suspicion of piracy, was released in 1275, through the intervention of the Scottish King.³ Philip de Ridale, a great Berwick merchant, and another, whose vessel, bound for Dieppe with wool, &c., had been plundered by a pretended salvor off the coast of Lindseye, were ordered redress on 11th May 1276.⁴ In August of the same year we find a landowner of the latter district, sending to buy horses at Stirling fair.⁵ In 1278-79, a London trader to Scotland has a protection for a year.⁶

Edward I.
(Alex. III.)

The extensive intercourse between Scotland and the port of Bordeaux is shewn by a long process, which must have begun some years before Alexander's death, not ending till the reign of John Balliol, whereby a Gascon merchant, John Mazun (or Massun), claimed a large sum⁷ for wines, &c., supplied to the Court of Scotland, and asserted that, besides delaying payment till his credit at home was destroyed, the Scots cheated and imprisoned him. The affair involved the two Kings in correspondence in 1284,⁸ besides petitions from the mayor of Bordeaux,⁹ and the creditor,¹⁰ then in a Scottish prison. He seems to have threatened to annoy Scotsmen in his own country, for, on 27th March 1286, he gives security to abstain from so doing,¹¹ and has a safe conduct to go with an official to Scotland to recover.¹² In 1288 the executors of Alexander III. complained that he was arresting Scotsmen's goods in England for his debt.¹³ Lengthy proceedings, apparently with no result, took place before commissioners who sat at Carham on the March, in February 1288-89.¹⁴ His case slept during the Interregnum, but, on

III., Margaret, John Balliol.) summoned on 2nd April 1294,¹ to appear and answer at Westminster to the Gascon's demand. The executors of the late King explained² how the final payment would have been made but for the creditor's own conduct, and with this the affair disappears from record.

In a very curious letter without date,³ in old Castilian, a Spanish shipmaster relates to the Scottish King the misfortunes of his vessel, driven far out of her course on the Western Islands, and the treacherous conduct of an island chief, who may perhaps be identified with 'Alan MacRotheryk,' whose son appears on the Ragman Roll. The particulars of the cargo, given in Norman French, are interesting.⁴

We may now pass lightly over the next three periods—the reign of Margaret of Norway, the Interregnum during the Competition, and the reign of John Balliol.⁵

From the grave of their lamented Sovereign at Dunfermline, the magnates of Scotland who had assisted at his obsequies, headed by the Bishops of St Andrews and Glasgow, addressed the King of England on the 29th March 1286,⁶ consulting him as the nearest in blood to their infant Queen.

⁵ These have been fully illustrated in several important works, official and non-official, viz:—Hailes' Annals of Scotland, Rymer's Fœdera, Sir Francis Palgrave's Documents and Records relating to Scotland (1837), and the Rev. Joseph Stevenson's Documents illustrative of the History of Scotland (1286-1306), published in 1870. The documents printed in these works, being given at length and in the original, are merely noted briefly in this volume for the sake of continuity. Here the editor must express his obligations to the valuable work of Mr Stevenson. From the nature of the book, however, which, as its title bears, consists of 'Selections,' taken not only from the public records, but from other sources, while the present work embraces all documents in the former repository connected with Scotland, it necessarily follows, that occasionally Mr Stevenson's labours are supplemented by additional notices. It is also to be borne in mind, that when that gentleman, and Sir Francis Palgrave before him, perused the originals, these were in a very different state of repair from their present condition. Under the careful management of nearly two generations of able public officials, these documents have been repaired and mounted, rendering it sometimes possible to make out words and dates which baffled these learned persons. Some however have become illegible by their gradual decay since they were printed by Sir F. Palgrave.

Six Guardians were shortly after (11th April) appointed by the convention at Scone, in name of the infant, including these two bishops,¹ and under their government the affairs of the kingdom were conducted on the whole much as during the late reign. The King of England, naturally enough, was desirous to embrace the opportunity of uniting the two realms by the marriage of his son and grand-niece, and with this object many negotiations took place between his envoys and those of Norway and Scotland during the year 1289,² ending with the important Treaty of Salisbury on 6th November,³ and the Papal bull of Nicholas IV. permitting the intended marriage.⁴ He had procured an earlier bull from the late Pope, Honorius IV. (on 27th May 1286),⁵ granting a general dispensation for all his children to marry within the forbidden degrees. To smooth proceedings, he had also lent the King of Norway 2000 marks in 1286,⁶ and his energetic envoy, the Bishop of Durham (probably not long after that date) granted the considerable sum of 400*l.* in annuities to Norwegians of rank, till the Queen attained the age of 15.⁷ He wrote urgently to Eric⁸ on 17th April 1290, to hasten the arrival of his daughter in England, a request which had been already made to Eric by the Guardians on 17th March.⁹ On that day they had signified their consent to the marriage under their common seal,¹⁰ Edward having bound himself to them in a penalty of 3000 marks, unless their Queen arrived by All Saints' day.¹¹ The important marriage treaty at Brigham on the Tweed next followed, between the English Ambassadors and the magnates and community of Scotland, duly ratified by Edward at Northampton on 28th August 1290.¹² The principal personages had appointed procurators,¹³ the King of England had with paternal interest despatched a great vessel from Yarmouth, victualled with delicacies in the spirit of the age,¹⁴ to bring the young Queen to her realm; and all things seemed to point to a happy issue of his anxious negotiations at the Court of Rome and elsewhere, attended as they had been with heavy expenses.¹

In this fair prospect of a happy alliance between the two nations, while messengers were hurrying through the land with accounts of the arrival of the young Queen and her father in Orkney,² and the magnates of Scotland were assembled at Perth to deliberate upon the negotiations which were in progress with the King of England, and to make arrangements for receiving 'the child of so many hopes,'³ a doleful rumour spread through the land that she had died before touching the shores of her kingdom. On 7th October 1290, the Bishop of St Andrews reported it to Edward I., and urged him to take steps to prevent disorders.⁴ The Bishop mentioned that at the instigation of certain persons,⁵ the Lord of Annandale had unexpectedly come with a formidable retinue to Perth.

In the Competition for the Crown, to which we now direct our attention, Rymer's Fædera and Sir Francis Palgrave supply the bulk of the documentary evidence, printed at great length. The Fædera embodies the entire proceedings from the time when Edward I. met the clergy and nobles of Scotland at Norham in May 1291, to his final decision in November 1292, adjudging the Crown to Balliol. This famous document, known as the Great Roll of Scotland, was drawn up by Master John de Cadamo (or of Caen), an apostolic notary, in a narrative form, embodying the successive instruments, which were written from day to day, as the business proceeded, by another official, Master Andrew de Tang, clerk of the Diocese of York. As these last sometimes give expressions and facts differing from the Great Roll, the narrative in this Calendar has been taken from them, with great brevity of course, and the differences pointed out.

Bergen, in whose arms she died, brought her body back to Norway, and the King her father, after satisfying himself that it was his daughter's corpse, caused her to be buried beside her mother on the north side of the choir of Bergen cathedral.

⁵ Lord Hailes conjectures that the Bishop of Glasgow is here pointed at.

(Interreg-

Sir Francis Palgrave has given, with one or two exceptions, the responses by twenty-two of the religious houses to Edward's commands on them to furnish evidence touching the two kingdoms;¹ as also the pleadings of the Competitors.² These also have been stated here with the utmost succinctness. In Mr Stevenson's volumes we have the instruments connected with the administration of the kingdom of Scotland by the four surviving Guardians, the Bishops of St Andrews and Glasgow, the elder Comyn, and James the Steward—to whom Edward had added a fifth, Brian fitz Alan of Bedale—all deriving their powers ex terminis from him in his assumed capacity of overlord.³

The extracts from the Chronicles were read at the first meeting on 10th May.⁴ They contain a curious mixture of historical facts and monkish legends. One, that of Chester,⁵ is not in Palgrave, and has an interesting account of the circumstances attending the death of St Margaret Queen of Malcolm Canmore. That following it, of Faversham,⁶ gives some particulars which, from the state of the document, escaped the acute eye of Palgrave—Arthur's victories at Douglas water over Colgrim and the Saxons and Scots, and the Scots and Picts besieging his sick nephew Hoel in the city of Alcluyd, when they fled to the isles of Lennox—and over Gilla . . . nurias, an Irish king, and his barbarians. That of Carlisle⁷ seems most strictly historical of all. The undated preliminary appeal to King Edward by the seven Earls of Scotland,⁸ will be remarked as being distinctly written in the interest of the Lord of Annandale, from whom, in Palgrave's opinion, the very subservient letter to the King⁹ probably emanated. Balliol has been singled out by common fame as more obsequious than the others, which pliancy is said to have gained him the Crown. But those who read the various instruments¹⁰ will probably be of opinion that all were alike prepared

 Edward I.
 num.)

Besides the homages made to Edward as overlord on Holywell Haugh, on 13th June 1291,¹ by the Guardians and twenty-seven other Earls and Barons of Scotland, it was ordered by the Guardians that the same submission should be made by all, clerical and lay, who would have been bound to make it to a living King of Scotland.² This was done, apparently to a limited extent, for in the existing document,³ there are little more than two hundred names, made up of three bishops (Dunblane, Aberdeen, and Ross), twelve abbots and priors, the heads of the two military orders, three prioresses, and Maria Queen of Man, two earls (Stratherne and Ross), thirty-six barons and knights, eighty-two burgesses of Berwick with the mayor, and seventy of Perth.

Among the claims of the Competitors,⁴ there is a remarkable variation in that of John Comyn. In the Great Roll, he traced his descent from Bethoc, daughter and heir of Dovenald, son of Duncan, son of Crinan, i.e., Donald Bane King of Scotland, younger brother of Malcolm Canmore. In the original instrument here calendared, he traces it from Hextildis, daughter and heir of Gothrik, son and heir of the above Donald. The former of these genealogies is supported by a charter of Henry III. in 1261,⁵ confirming to John Cumyn's father the extensive Tyne-dale lands which had been derived from Hextildis, his ancestress, wife of Richard Cumyn, and styled daughter of Huctred son of Waldef.⁶ This Huctred or Uctred (the same as Gothrik) appears as a great landowner in Northumberland in the Pipe Roll of Henry I.⁷ It does not seem to be known who he was, but as his father, Waldef or Walleof, must have been a contemporary of Donald Bane, the royal descent of Comyn must have been through the latter's daughter Bethoc, the wife of Huctred.

It is unnecessary to pursue in detail the well known story of the proceedings which ended in the decision by the King of England, on 17th November 1292, in favour of John Balliol as King of Scotland,¹ the latter's subsequent fealty and homage,² and the instruments by his magnates and the official notary attesting it.³ His first royal act was the release to Edward I., on 2nd January 1292-93,⁴ of all obligations undertaken by the latter to him or his people while Scotland was in his hands. All these were carefully deposited at Westminster on the 16th of the same month,⁵ with a notarial protest by the King of England, reserving his full right to hear appeals from Scotland.

The new King soon learned that this was to be a very operative clause. In April he writes to his overlord, deprecating being summoned on the justice eyre in Yorkshire;⁶ and though Edward freed him of the large sum of 3000*l.*, due for the relief of his late mother's English lands, permitting the balance of less than 300*l.* to be paid by easy instalments,⁷ and made other concessions of a like nature, an instrument was taken as to his refusal of justice to a burgess of Berwick and Macduff of Fife,⁸ and he was summoned in person to answer at Westminster to the claim of the persevering Gascon merchant, John Masson, already noticed.⁹ Possibly to propitiate a powerful friend, we find him on 20th June 1294, giving the Bishop of Durham and his successors in the see, a considerable yearly revenue and church patronage in Tynedale, and a grant for life of the entire Cumberland manors belonging to the Scottish Crown.¹⁰

The Berwick burgesses made great complaints of English interference with their shipping,¹¹ which was supported by a letter from their King to Edward, 2nd July 1294.¹² Edward being on the point of war with France, summoned Balliol and eighteen of his magnates to join him with their forces, in London on 1st September the same year.¹³ Balliol having entered into negotiations with Philip IV.,¹⁴ evaded the demand, and Edward probably was not then prepared to enforce it. But Balliol may have sent

1294-96. Edward I. (John Balliol.) to excuse himself, as on 23rd August 1295,¹ Edward writes to him in reply, by 'Henry of Aberdeen,'² Balliol's envoy, saying he has committed his views to him vivâ voce. This was soon followed, however, by the seizure of Balliol's and all other Scotsmen's lands in England, on 16th October,³ a step, doubtless, fully justified in Edward's eyes, by the subsequent discovery of the alliance between Balliol and Philip, dated 23rd of same month,⁴ and by the letter from Balliol, at length goaded beyond endurance (without date, but evidently at the same period),⁵ in which he recites the injuries sustained by himself and his subjects, and renounces his allegiance, with the homage extorted by violence. The records contain but slight allusion⁶ to the Scottish invasion of Cumberland by Balliol's army on 26th March 1296, under the Earl of Buchan, their repulse at Carlisle on the 28th, and their inroad into Northumberland on 8th April, when Hexham and Corbridge were burned and the country wasted.⁷ Early in February previous, Edward had summoned his forces to meet him at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and was on his way to Scotland,⁸ apparently reaching the borders by the end of that or beginning of next month.⁹ Here he drew from the obscurity (perhaps the prison), where he had remained for upwards of fifty years, Thomas, the bastard son of Alan of Galloway, who had once been desired as their lord by the men of Galloway,¹⁰ rather than that their country should be parcelled out among the daughters of Alan. It is likely he had been kept by Balliol and his father, as a formidable rival, in honourable captivity, and Edward may have designed restoring him to his father's possessions, or the Balliol part of these, as he granted the Galwegians their old liberties at Thomas's instance, and likewise sent him to Carlisle castle to be near his country.¹¹ We hear no more of him, and probably he did not long survive, for he must have been a man of great age. Another circumstance of some interest may also be here adverted to. The King of England, who had reached 'Werk' (which the editor takes to be Werk on Tweed) by the 17th March or sooner, must, to all appearance, have there received the homages rendered on the 14th of March by ninety Scottish landowners, headed by the Earl of Lennox.¹ The year is not given, but as we find among them the name of Patrick de Graham, who fell at Dunbar on the 28th April 1296, we conclude that it must have been at this time. These persons probably foresaw the inevitable issue of the contest, and with one or two exceptions, none of their names occur in the list of the 130 prisoners taken at Dunbar and sent to English prisons.² With the exception of this last-mentioned document, and several others of the same tenor,³ a report on the damage done by the English army, which crossed the Tweed at Coldstream on 28th March,⁴ and an order by the King at Berwick, on 2nd April, that Sir Robert Clifford keep the Marches with 140 men-at-arms and 500 foot,⁵ we have no information here regarding the capture of Berwick and the battle of Dunbar. These must be learned from the chroniclers of the time, who relate the story with various degrees of accuracy. A Placita roll of the army, which shows the strict discipline maintained,⁶ gives, in conjunction with the numerous homage deeds which now begin to appear, a pretty full itinerary of Edward I. in Scotland, from 21st March to 28th August 1296. These homage deeds, of which about seventy originals are still in existence, more or less decayed, occasionally having the seal attached, begin with that of James the Steward of Scotland⁷ at Roxburgh castle, on 13th May, followed by that of his brother John, two days after.⁸ On referring to these and the others, in the text of Palgrave, it will be found that those who had rebelled, or were specially connected with Balliol, are made to abjure any allegiance to him; the others simply swear fealty to Edward as King of England.

he granted under his Great Seal at Kyncardyn the instrument¹ confessing his sins against his liege lord, and delivering up to him his realm and people. While Fordun,² on the authority of Baldred Bisset, the Scottish envoy at Rome, avers this to have been a forgery, there is no doubt of the genuineness of another instrument³ by which, on the 7th of the same month, Balliol, in the churchyard of Stracathro in Forfarshire, renounced his treaty with Philip, and three days later, in Brechin castle, resigned his realm, people, and royal seal, to the Bishop of Durham on behalf of Edward.⁴ For ten years the unhappy realm was without a king; though the successive Regents, Wallace, Comyn, and others, professed to hold office on behalf of King John, in their correspondence with the French King.

The document⁵ discovered under the title ‘Gardroba. Inventoria jocalium de diversis annis r. r. Edw.’ is of no little value, as being, so far as the editor recollects, the only direct evidence on record that, in addition to a number of jewels, relics, &c., found in Edinburgh castle, a great coffer and two small coffers, with divers writings and memoranda found there, were, on 17th September 1296, transferred from Berwick-on-Tweed to London, and deposited in the Wardrobe at Westminster. It may be fairly surmised that these comprised many, if not all, of the old Records of Scotland. The incident forms an appropriate close to the reign of Balliol.

In touching on the documents during this second Interregnum, probably the best known by name at least, is the celebrated Ragman Roll,⁶ an invaluable record of the landowners of Scotland at a time for which no other data of equal value exist. There are three copies of it,⁷ from one of which (No. 88) Prynne printed copious extracts, not always correctly. The Bannatyne Club, fifty years ago, printed (the editor thinks) from the

Edward I.
num.)

In this document there are recorded, first, the several homages by the bishops, barons, and chief men of Scotland, made during King Edward's northern progress after Dunbar; and secondly, the more universal homages made at the Parliament of Berwick-on-Tweed on 28th August the same year, when all these persons took the oaths again, with the addition of the dignified churchmen, the earls, barons, knights, burgesses, and whole community of Scotland. From the extreme north of Scotland to the Rhinns of Galloway in the south, and from the Western Isles to the Lothians, the landowners of Scotland, great and small, were summoned. There are, allowing for duplicates, nearly two thousand names enrolled; and, as the counties to which they belonged are generally referred to with much care, it is sometimes possible, notwithstanding the antiquated forms under which they appear, to identify the names with those of still existing places or families. It would occupy too much space to consider it from all its points of view; but it may be observed that some names are repeated more than once, and others omitted. Notably among these last are the Bishops of St Andrews and Dunkeld, and Sir John de Soulis, three of the four Commissioners who negotiated the treaty between Balliol and Philip of France.² Bishop Fraser probably felt that this was too serious an offence to be lightly passed over by Edward, and remained in France, where he died next year.³ Nor are the Bishops of Moray, Breehin, or Dunblane to be found.⁴ The name of Simon Fraser will be looked for in vain, though he swore fealty at a later date, 13th October, the same year,⁵ and, on 28th May 1297, came under a very solemn oath, under the guarantee of his cousin, Sir Richard Fraser, in Edward's own presence at Bramber in Sussex.⁶ He served under Edward's banners in Flanders,⁷ to that King's great pleasure,⁸ and after serving him 1296-97. with more or less constancy for some years, he revolted in 1302, again came to peace with Comyn, but revolting, finally, with Edward I. (Interregnum.) the Earl of Carrick, was executed not long after Wallace. Robert de Keith, too, is not to be found, who, we shortly learn,¹ was accounted so dangerous a foe, that Edward sent him from Carlisle castle far into the interior of England; and yet afterwards Keith became and remained one of his firmest adherents. Such anomalies meet the reader at every step through these records. One bright exception is the patriot Wallace. Though there are three Waleyses of Ayrshire on the Roll, his name is not there, and there can be no doubt of the fact that, as he said on his trial, he was never a liegeman of England.

Thus, though this Roll is not printed for the first time, there is much to be found in it by those who study it in conjunction with other documents in the Calendar. In addition it may also be here pointed out, that, as all the homage seals now remaining in the Chapter House are for the first time systematically described in their actual state, whether still on the deeds or detached, and are often grouped together by the original strings, this affords a new means of identifying, with more or less accuracy, probably not far from one-third of the parties to the original homages. This will be dealt with a little more fully as we proceed.

The tranquillity of the country did not last long. The mere fact that besides the three high offices of Governor, Treasurer, and Justiciar, many others were filled by Englishmen, could not fail to be irritating to an independent people. The writ of 31st January 1296-97,² ordering the Governor to forbid any one to leave the kingdom, points at disturbances, possibly those in which Wallace first came under the notice of the authorities; and the messages from the King of England to nearly sixty Scottish earls and barons, both north and south of Perth, on 24th May 1297,³ to be communicated to them vivâ voce by Cressingham and another official, probably related to securing the peace while he was absent in Flanders, whither he went late in August the same year. To the like effect were the ample powers entrusted to Henry de Percy and Robert de Clifford, about June of that year,¹ and his thanks to several Galloway magnates for their good offices about the same time.² The editor cannot, from the records, give any new evidence as to the incidents in Wallace's career which led to the armed rising that ended in the Scottish victory at Falkirk, or verify the romantic stories related by Henry the Minstrel, with one exception—the slaughter of the sheriff of Lanark. The *Chronicle of Lanercost*³ distinctly attributes the origin of the rising to the Bishop of Glasgow and the Steward. The fact that the sheriff of Lanark was killed during this period, appears incidentally in an inquiry made about Michaelmas 1304,⁴ as to money in the official custody of the late Hugh de Cressingham, which had gone amissing after his death at Stirling, and had been, it was stated, placed in Werkworth castle in August before his death for fear of the Scots, 'who had begun to rise against the King [of England], and had killed the sheriff of Lanark.'⁵ His name is not given, and so must be looked for elsewhere. Andrew de Livingstone was sheriff of Lanark for the year 1296, when he accounts for 80*l.* of its issues.⁶ The same Andrew, as a Lanarkshire freeholder, appears on the Ragman Roll, and in May 1297, he is among the barons south of Forth to whom Edward I. sent a verbal message.⁷ From this date he occurs no more—and as the insurrection must have come to a head about this time, the probability is that he met his death attempting to put it down at Lanark.⁸ At any rate, Sir Andrew (who was ancestor of the

It sounds,however, like a Scottish territorial designation, and as the Livingstones possessed Mousebriggs and other lands near Lanark, Andrew may, after all, be the person intended by the Minstrel. The editor is aware that Fordun calls him William de Hesliope, 'Anglieus,' and that in a MS. (Add. MSS. Brit. Mus. 8835, fol. 42), cited by Mr Stevenson, in Documents illustrative of Sir William Wallace, his life and times, 1841 (Maitland Club), he is called William de Heschregg. But Fordun wrote

The energetic measures of Percy and Clifford soon brought the Bishop of Glasgow and other magnates to terms.¹ These were the Earl of Carrick, the Steward, John his brother, Alexander de Lindsay, and William de Douglas; and the Earl agreed, under security, to deliver his young daughter Marjory as a hostage for his loyalty. Wallace, however, declined to submit, and with his adherents retired to Selkirk forest, as we learn from a letter of Cressingham to the King, written from Berwick on 23rd August.² Douglas was put in irons in Berwick castle, the reason assigned being that he had not fulfilled his agreement.³ He was never liberated, but was soon transferred to the Tower.⁴ He was alive there on 6th November,⁵ but must have died shortly before 20th January 1298-99, when his widow has a writ for the dower lands of her first husband,⁶ which had been seized along with those of Douglas.

The state of Scotland, though unsettled, cannot have been thought dangerous in the summer of 1297, as Edward left for Flanders in August, taking with him many of the barons and knights of Scotland, who had been released from prison on condition of serving against France.⁷ But there is no doubt there were disturbances in the far north, in the districts of Moray and Ross, set on foot or fomented by Andrew de Moray, in May, who shortly afterwards joined his forces to Wallace and fell at the battle of Stirling. So much is learned from several letters to the English King in July of this year,⁸ written nearly a century after this time, and the document cited by Mr Stevenson is only a modern copy, of one of the Cotton MSS. which was destroyed in the fire of 1731. The writer of the original, which was a register of events by some officer of the city of London (and a very curious document), was probably not conversant with Scottish surnames—or the copyist may have misread the name as he has some others. This MS. has been lately printed in vol. i. of Chronicles of the Reigns of Edw. I. and Edw. II. (Rolls series.)

Edward I.
(Wallace.)

A historical error seems to have been committed regarding this Andrew de Moray, and as one of the bearers of this name was a distinguished man, and died Regent of Scotland for David II., the present is an opportunity for setting it right. Lord Hailes,—then, of course, without the full information from records that is now before us,—whom all others have followed, calls his father ‘Sir Andrew Moray of Bothwell,’ and ‘the only baron who adhered to Wallace’; and says that after his fall at Stirling, Wallace ‘took as his partner in command the young Sir Andrew Moray’ his son. Now, though of the same stock, neither of them was ‘baron of Bothwell’ in 1297. The then titular lord of Bothwell (for Edward had confiscated the barony) was Sir William de Moray, who swore fealty, 28th August 1296,¹ along with twenty-one of the greatest magnates, immediately after the churchmen.

He was the heir of Walter de Moray, lord of Bothwell in the time of Alexander III., and the manor of Lilleford, in Lincolnshire, belonged to them.² He appears to have been compelled to live in England, in Lincolnshire, and in poverty, deprived of his great estates, as shewn by Edward’s order on Exchequer,³ that sustenance be allowed him, under which he receives 25*l.* from the sheriff at Michaelmas 1299; and he died, probably in England, before 10th November 1300.⁴

Sir Andrew de Moray ‘knight,’ and his son Andrew de Moray ‘esquire,’ were both made prisoners at Dunbar in 1296. The knight was sent to the Tower, and the esquire to Chester castle, on 16th May 1296.⁵ The latter had either been ransomed or escaped to the north, but the father was certainly still a prisoner in the Tower when the battle of Stirling was fought.⁶

His son Andrew had a conduct to visit him on 28th August that year,¹ which he cannot possibly have used, as he, not his father, was undoubtedly killed fourteen days afterwards at Stirling. His father must have died between 6th November 1297 and 28th November 1300, still a prisoner. These two Andrews, father and son, being thus accounted for, who was the Sir Andrew de Moray of Bothwell, brother-in-law of King Robert Bruce, and Regent of Scotland? He was the son of the younger Andrew de Moray, killed at Stirling. This is made clear by the inquisition post mortem,² already referred to, taken on the death of Sir William de Moray (evidently of Bothwell), whose heir in some lands in Berwickshire, held of the Earl of March,³ is found to be a child named Andrew 'son of Andrew 'de Moray, slain at Stirling against the King,' who was son of the late Sir Andrew de Moray; further, that this boy was two years old at the last Pentecost, i.e., born about Pentecost 1298, rather more than eight months after his father's death. What the precise relationship between this boy and the head of the house was, is not stated, but it is clear he was the only Andrew living in 1300, and the nearest heir. If so, the Regent was a man of only forty years of age at his death in 1338, instead of the veteran approaching seventy, as hitherto supposed, and his wife, Christian Bruce, was much older than himself. In fact, her son Donald earl of Mar, the Regent who fell at Dupplin in 1332, must have been older than his step-father Moray.⁴

⁴ It is seldom that dates so exact can be got at so remote a period. This discovery will also explain why he never appears till late in the reign of Robert I. Had he been the comrade of Wallace, he would have been senior to Douglas and Randolph, and at least equally entitled to take a leading share in the councils of his country. Whereas he only became prominent on the death of these eminent men. It is true that two documents may be cited to prove that an Andrew de Moray was alive after the battle of Stirling. The first of these is a letter by Andrew de Moray and William le Waleys, leaders of the armies of Scotland, addressed to the mayors and commons of Lübeck and Hamburg on 11th October 1297, dated at 'Hadsington' in Scotland, respecting freedom of trade between these towns, and Scotland now delivered from the English. This was first printed by Lappenberg in his edition of Sartorius's Urkundliche Geschichte des Ursprunges der deutschen Hanse (Hamburg, 1830), ii. 188, and also by Mr Stevenson, in the Wallace documents (already cited), p. 159, with a facsimile from the archives of Lübeck. The other is the protection cited by Hemingburgh vol. ii. p. 144, granted by Moray and Wallace to Hexham, dated 7th November 1297. This we only know from his pages, the original being non-existent. Besides, in one MS. of Hemingburgh, Moray is called 'Alexander.' The statements of the inquisition

There is little in the Records touching the English defeat at Stirling bridge. A writ issued in the name of the English King by the Prince of Wales on September 12th, when the result was of course unknown,¹ orders the Earl of Surrey, who had been superseded by Brian fitz Alan as governor before the King left England,² to remain till the country was settled. Another on 24th September, repeated the command, and ordered the sheriff of York and thirteen northern barons to join Surrey with their forces instead of coming to London.³ Surrey had by this time retreated as far as York,⁴ and the whole of the border counties, as far as Newcastle on the east, and Carlisle on the west, were overrun by the successful Scots,⁵ though they were repulsed before these fortified towns. The burgesses of Roxburgh relate in their petition to Edward how they were surprised and only escaped with their lives.⁶ An irregular force, however, like that under Wallace, could not long maintain the offensive, and as Edward was known to be on his way back to England, and reinforcements had been ordered⁷ to the number of about 30,000 foot, besides the military tenants, confidence was restored, and the Earl of Surrey is found again at Roxburgh on 16th February 1297-98,⁸ the King of England also issuing a writ on the 17th March⁹ from Canterbury, three days after landing, thanking his forces in Scotland for their good services, and saying he was hastening to join them.

The year 1299 opens with a permission by Edward to negotiate the exchange of ten prisoners of rank with the Scots,⁷ for an equal number in England. These are probably the prisoners alluded to in the letter to Edward from his constable of Roxburgh castle on 20th August that year,⁸ which relates the curious story, learned by his spy, of the quarrels among the nobles at the election of the Bishop of St Andrews, the Earl of Carrick, and John Comyn as Guardians, at Peebles a day or two before. The Scots patriots were now raising their heads again, and were negotiating with Philip of France, who seems to have been desirous, despite Edward's positive refusal, to include them as his allies in the truce of June 1298.⁹ Edward made strenuous efforts to apprehend the Scottish envoys on their return voyage,¹⁰ without success.

Though Edward, on 18th September, ordered a levy of 16,000 foot to assemble at Newcastle-on-Tyne by 24th November, for a Scottish invasion,³ his barons refused to advance; and though he postponed the muster till 13th December at Berwick,⁴ he was obliged to desist from his intention, and leave the castle of Stirling, then besieged by the three Guardians,⁵ to its fate. It surrendered shortly after, with its garrison of ninety men,⁶ after enduring considerable privations.⁷ The English forces at this time held no part of Scotland beyond the Forth; and even in the south the castles of Bothwell and Carlaverock were held by the Scots.⁸ In the second of the documents last referred to, the constable of Lochmaben tells the King of England that he had secured the head of Robert de Coningham constable of Carlaverock, and set it up on the keep of his fortress. The slain man was a nephew of the Steward of Scotland. This shews the ferocity of these Border forays into which the war had degenerated. An undated document⁹ assigned to this period must be placed one, perhaps two years later.

Early in 1300, Edward gave large orders for provisions to be forwarded from England and Ireland, to Berwick and Skinburness near Carlisle, by Midsummer, and having ordered 16,000 foot to muster at Carlisle, joined them with his son and his barons, and after taking Carlaverock castle,¹⁰ marched through the borders of Galloway, reducing it to partial submission.¹¹ He remained during the autumn months at Carlisle and the castle of La Rose,¹² staying a week at Dumfries (October 23-30),

In the north the English held Edinburgh, Linlithgow, Stirling, and Kirkintilloch castles as an outer line, with Bothwell to command Clydesdale. On the east, Dirleton, Dunbar, and Berwick-on-Tweed. Along the Border, Roxburgh, Jedburgh, Hermitage-Soules, and Lydel; Lochmaben, to command Annandale, with Dumfries, Carlaverock, Dalswynton, and Tibbers for Nithsdale, and the outlying post of Botel in Kirkeudbright for Galloway. By a return in February preceding,³ the garrison of Edinburgh numbered 347 of all ranks with 157 horses. The castle and county of Dumfries, with Lochmaben, and Annandale, were held by 70 men-at-arms, and 200 foot.⁴ Berwick-on-Tweed was held by 30 men-at-arms and 200 foot⁵; and Jedburgh and Roxburgh by 30 men-at-arms and 130 foot.⁶ Hermitage and the Mote of Lydel were in the hands of Sir Simon de Lindsay, with what number of men is not stated.⁷ In a roll for the last month of the year,⁸ we learn that Carlisle was besieged by the Scots for a month in November and December 1297, after the victory of Stirling; and also between 20th July and 2nd August 1298; which latter attack shews perhaps an attempted diversion in favour of Wallace and his army, who were being crushed at Falkirk. Twenty-one unfortunate Galwegians had been placed by Surrey in Carlisle castle in 1297 as hostages, ten of whom had died, and the others were still there. The letter from Philip of France, bespeaking the Pope's favour for Sir William Wallace, was probably written, either in this or the end of the previous year.⁹

cost 1301,¹ and the attempts of the French to renew it having failed, to Edward's evident satisfaction,² the barons having also supported him in the celebrated letter from Lincoln, in which they denied the Pope's jurisdiction in temporal matters, and his power to decide as to the rights of the King of England over Scotland,³ he made ready for another campaign. He ordered the Northumbrians to be on the alert against the enemy,⁴ and levies of 12,000 foot to meet him at Berwick-on-Tweed at Midsummer.⁵ The Prince of Wales being now sixteen years old, his father resolved to give him an independent command, and ordered the Earls of Lincoln, Lancaster, Gloucester, and Arundel, and twenty other barons and knights, to meet the Prince at Carlisle with their forces, on the above day, 'that the chief honour of taming the pride of the Scots' (so the writ runs), might accrue to the young leader.⁶ Great provision of victual was also made from England, Wales, and Ireland, to be brought to Berwick, Carlisle, and the Isle of Arran in Scotland.⁷ The two armies entered Scotland shortly after Midsummer, the Prince's force marching by Dumfries⁸ into Galloway, where he made or was reported to have made, in September, a pilgrimage to the shrine of St Ninian at Whithorn.⁹ Though preparations were made for him at Ayr and Turnberry castle, and he had proceeded as far as the water of Cree, where he was on the 1st and 2nd October,¹⁰ he had returned to Carlisle by the 5th,¹¹ remaining there till towards the end of the month;¹² and we hear no more of him till he is found with his father in Linlithgow on 30th December.¹³ The reason for his force not proceeding into Ayrshire was the very unsettled state of the district, as we shall presently see. Turning to the King's division of the army, there are much more definite data as to its number and movements on the original Pay Roll.¹⁴

1301. There were about 6800 foot, and a troop of about forty hobelars and foresters from Roxburgh and Selkirk. They were paid at Edward I. and foresters from Roxburgh and Selkirk. They were paid at (Bishop of St Andrews, Earl of Carrick, John Comyn junior, Guardians.) Berwick, on 12th and 14th July; at Selkirk, on 25th; at Peebles, on 8th August; at Cambusnethan, on 18th August; at Bothwell, on 6th September; and at Dunipace, on 29th. Their route is thus clearly marked, up the valley of the Tweed to Peebles, then across Tweed and up Lyne water towards Carstairs and the valley of Clyde, passing near Biggar, perhaps halting there on the march.¹ The cavalry force is also given on a horse roll for the same expedition.² On his march Edward granted a charter (at Peebles on 10th August)³ of the late Sir William de Moray's barony of Bothwell, &c., to Aymar de Valence, though the castle was then in the enemy's hands. He must have received several disturbing pieces of news in his progress. The warden of Lochmaben castle, writing on 10th September, reported his repulse of an attack on that fortress by a strong Scottish force, under Sir John de Soulis and Sir Ingram de Umfraville;⁴ and three days later, the constable of Roxburgh gave him further news of this same army.⁵ On the 14th of the same month a serious mutiny in the garrison of Berwick-on-Tweed, owing to the men being in arrear of pay, was reported to him by its constable, and though it was put down, from the lucky chance of the money arriving, yet the leaders concerned were dissatisfied at the distribution.⁶ A dispute between his lieutenants in Roxburgh, as to the division of booty taken from a band of robbers there, was also referred to his decision.⁷ And finally, a letter written on 3rd October, from the constable of Ayr, reporting an attack by the Scottish force in great strength, on Turnbery and Ayr castles,⁸ must have caused him anxiety for the division under his son. With considerable strategy the Scots had got into his rear, and from their retreat in the mountainous district

lying between the head of Nithsdale, Kirkcudbright, and Carrick, were endeavouring to separate the two English armies. But the Ayrshire garrisons maintained their ground,¹ and Edward after visiting Glasgow,² where iron and coal were bought,³ and taking Bothwell Castle early in September,⁴ prepared to secure his hold on the country by wintering at Linlithgow. A letter from an official at Roxburgh, shews the forces keeping Selkirk Forest, and their arrangements for watching the Scots in Galloway, as well as the urgent need of money.⁵ A carefully drawn up statement⁶ shews the numbers of the English army with the King in Scotland on 8th October, exclusive of the Prince's division, their daily, weekly, and yearly pay, and the like details of five castles (that of Carstairs now first noticed) and the forest of Selkirk.

From Linlithgow, in November,⁷ Edward ordered additional stores from Ireland to be delivered at Skynburness and Ayr for the Prince, and to supply Lochmaben and Dumfries. He also built a house for himself at Linlithgow;⁸ and had large quantities of hay shipped at Newcastle for the port of Blackness on the Forth.⁹ Additional levies of 4900 foot were ordered to march for Linlithgow on New Year's day;¹⁰ but, by a later writ,¹¹ they were reduced to 1400. He received a New Year's gift from the Queen by the hands of Sir Aymar de Valence,¹² and on 26th January ratified another truce with the Scots till St Andrew's day the same year, obtained at the mediation of France.¹³

About the beginning of February 1301-2, Edward set out for England, and on the 12th was at Roxburgh castle, where, under his own eye, indentures were executed by the wardens of Edinburgh, Roxburgh, Berwick, Jedworth, Linlithgow, Bothwell, and Ayr, for the keeping of these places till Pentecost.¹⁴ Sir

Although the Earl of Carrick was still one of the Guardians in name, a Galloway homicide is pardoned by Edward on 16th February at his request;⁶ and by the end of April following he had, with some of his Carrick tenants, been received to peace.⁷ In singular contrast to his actual position, the letter of King Philip, addressed to him and John Comyn junior, as 'Guardians of Scotland for King John,' dated 6th April 1302,⁸ will be read. In it Philip encourages the Scots in their resistance to Edward, and hints that he is devising means to help them, but for safety prudently commits further details to the bearer, William, bishop of St Andrews, their fellow Guardian.

The year 1302 seems to have been, on the whole, inactive. The English retained the various fortresses and districts already stated as being in their hands. Particular details are given of the constables and garrisons of these and their other munitions till Christmas,⁹ and we see the progress of the new works at the peles of Linlithgow and Selkirk. On 4th August Edward granted a charter of privileges to Berwick-on-Tweed.¹⁰ And on 15th of that month six Scotsmen were allowed to go as envoys to France with the French Ambassadors.¹¹ A truce till Easter 1303, was concluded on 25th November, with France,¹² but it appears that the Scots were not included.

Edward, being now disengaged from foreign wars, bent his whole force to subdue Scotland. On 9th April 1303, 9500 foot were ordered to muster at Roxburgh by 12th May, from York, Nottingham, Derby, Lancaster, Westmoreland, Cumberland, Durham, and Northumberland.⁴ Besides these the Earl of Carrick was requested to bring men-at-arms, and 1000 foot of Carrick and Galloway, and Sir Richard Siward 300 foot of Nithsdale.⁵ The pay roll of this army for both years, 1303 and 1304,⁶ supplies data for approximately estimating its numbers. The levies ordered from Ireland have been already referred to.⁷ Two fortified wooden bridges had been constructed under the King's direction at Lynn Regis, at great cost, for the passage of the army across the Forth, and were shipped for Scotland under escort of a fleet of thirty vessels in May⁸; and engines of war, stores, &c., had been despatched to the north.⁹ In the face of these formidable preparations, the Scottish envoys maintained their negotiations in France, though duped by Philip's fair words, and on 25th May wrote to Comyn, encouraging him and the community to strenuous resistance.¹⁰

Edward and his army reached Perth by the 11th June.¹¹ While there, the Scots (of Galloway probably), broke into Annandale and the Marches of Cumberland with a strong force, and the array of the latter county and Westmoreland, with a force drawn

The Earl of Carrick was at this time in English pay and associated with the English warden of Annandale.² He also held the office of sheriff of Lanark,³ and a little later (9th January 1303-4), was in command of the English garrison of Ayr.⁴ The chief event of this year was the capture of Brechin castle about the beginning of August,⁵ to which there are only some incidental references, shewing the Prince of Wales' presence there,⁶ and that Edward brought his engines by sea to Montrose⁷ and stripped the lead off the cathedral of Brechin for them, but afterwards restored it;⁸ and after marching his forces as far as Kinloss in Moray, from which he turned back on 10th October,⁹ reached Dunfermline soon after, where he spent the winter. Here he was joined by the Queen, who came by Tynemouth, where she stayed probably from the end of June till 26th September,¹⁰ reaching Norham castle by the middle of November.¹¹ Though New Years' gifts by her Majesty and the Countess of Holland are recorded as presented to the King at Dunfermline, on 1st January 1303-4,¹² she cannot have arrived there till the 18th or 19th January, as she only started from Berwick on the morrow of Hilary.¹³

The Household Roll of the Prince of Wales for this entire year¹⁴ contains many entries of interest. The imposing array of clothes, armour, and other effects with which he took the field; his losses at dice, considerably exceeding the value of his library¹⁵ or his oblations at Mass;¹⁶ his gifts to those who amused him or suffered from his jokes;¹⁷ his present of an Arts' gown to a successful tilter;¹⁸ and the costly cope presented by him to a Spanish Cardinal; all contributed to swell the sum total for the year of 5653*l.* 3*s.* 5½*d.*

Edward I.
(Bishop of St

Though in winter quarters, the King of England did not encourage idleness. He ordered carpenters and other workmen to be sought for in the Lothians, and sent to Dunfermline to prepare for his intended siege of Stirling,³ the last remaining stronghold in native hands. To harass those Scots who kept the field, he sent a cavalry expedition across the Forth to the neighbourhood of Stirling under very stringent orders as to secrecy.⁴ And in the beginning of January 1303-4, Sir John de Botetourte, justiciar of Galloway, organised a very strong expedition of nearly 3000 men, to make a foray on the Scots in the south-west.⁵ Aymar de Valence had been treating for some time with Comyn and his allies to bring them to Edward's will,⁶ and had been at Linlithgow and Glasgow in September, where he had borrowed 20*l.* from a canon on the King of England's business.⁷ Later on, in December, the patriots being about Perth, messages were exchanged between Edward and them,⁸ and after some further delay, and attempts to mitigate his rigorous⁹ conditions, from which, severe as they were, some were absolutely excepted, the Guardian and his followers laid down their arms at Strathorde on 9th February 1303-4,¹⁰ leaving Stirling castle to its fate. Wallace, whom the King of England declined on 3rd March to receive, except on terms of unconditional submission, still kept aloof somewhere in the upper parts of Stratherne or Menteith.¹¹ At this very moment, the Earl of Carrick and Christopher Seton were actively engaged in Edward's service, the latter in the garison of Lochmaben,¹² and the Earl in pursuit of the patriots,¹³ for which he

1303-4. had an especial letter of thanks from Edward. On 20th March 1303-4, Sir John de Menteith was appointed sheriff and constable of the shire, town, and castle of Dunbarton.¹ After holding a Parliament at St Andrews at Mid Lent, to which he summoned the Scottish magnates,² Edward decided to besiege Stirling;³ and sat down before the castle on 21st April.⁴ From that day till its surrender three months later, he personally directed the siege, for which extensive preparations were made,⁵ and every precaution taken to prevent supplies to the garrison.⁶ Lead for the engines was also stripped from all the churches in the district, care being taken however to leave the altars covered.⁷ The Earl of Carrick, who had succeeded by his father's death to his English estates, actively assisted, for substantial reasons.⁸ The lands of many Scotsmen who had come to Edward's peace were restored to them,⁹ prominent among these being the Bishops of St Andrews and Dunkeld and others of the late envoys to France.¹⁰ The goods and chattels of Sir William Oliphant the constable, and the garrison of Stirling were given to a recreant countryman.¹¹ To judge from the scarcity of provisions among the besiegers,¹² the garrison must have been in great privation. At least thirteen engines and a 'war wolf' of novel construction battered their ramparts,¹³ and Greek fire was showered on the defenders.¹⁴ They surrendered unconditionally on St Margaret's day (20th July), only twenty-five persons being named in the instrument attesting the surrender, along with the governor, though there seem to have been others still within.¹⁵ A curious fact is mentioned in a letter on the day the castle fell, that Edward ordered that none of his people should enter till it was struck by the 'war wolf,' possibly to see its effect.¹ The garrison were all despatched to English prisons particularly named.²

Edward remained some weeks in the neighbourhood,³ and probably feeling that while Wallace remained at large, his work was incomplete, held out inducements to some of his late associates to capture him.⁴ He was at the Abbey of Holyrood on 16th August,⁵ at Pentland the next day,⁶ and Eddleston on the 19th;⁷ from which he must have made a rapid march through Peebles, Traquair, and Selkirk, to Jedburgh by the 20th or 21st,⁸ resting at Yetham in the Cheviots till the 24th.⁹ An account of the expenses of his portable chapel while in Scotland, shews his simple personal habits.¹⁰ The household account of the Prince of Wales, beginning 20th November 1303, ending abruptly with a lost membrane on 19th April 1304,¹¹ illustrates his separate campaign in Perthshire, and gives the names of many in his train; among them Edward Bruce, the future King of Ireland.¹² It is pleasing to turn from these military records to two unique documents giving (though from an enemy's hand not the less valuable) the only information we have of the internal condition of the country about this period. The first of these¹³ is an account by the Escheator south of Forth in the years 1302, 1303, and 1304, and relates to the counties of Lanark, Peebles, Ayr, and Dumfries, and the district of Annandale. In Annandale those of the towns of Lochmaben and Annand, with many provostries, mills, &c.⁴ As the names of places are mentioned with much detail, this adds to its value. The other document⁵ is a compotus by the same officer and his colleague of an extent made of all the royal lands in Scotland from Sutherland to Galloway, between April 1304 and February of the following regnal year. Though the receipt was large (nearly 1400*l.*), the expenditure exceeded it by nearly 400*l.*, but as part of the document is much destroyed the details are not distinct. Beside land and burgh farms, it contains accounts of customs and arrangements for their collection at various ports. The ruined state of Stirling after the siege is shewn by the issues for the year being only 4*s.*⁶ The two officials who made this valuation had a strong armed escort during their labours, which regularly mounted guard at night.⁷

This year 1305 witnessed the capture of Wallace, when, the Records do not say, but probably not long after 21st May. Lord Hailes says that a prisoner, Ralph Haliburton, offered his aid in discovering him. This receives confirmation from the fact of this man's name being scored out of a list of prisoners in England, at that date.⁸ Before this time Edward de Kethe had received a gift from the King of England of whatever he might gain in pursuit of his patriot countryman.⁹ There are very few notices in the Calendar to add to the little that is known of Wallace's real history, outside of the poem of Henry the Minstrel. Whether he is the William le Waleys, whose companion is accused of robbery at Perth, in June 1296,¹⁰ the editor cannot say. He appears to have cut off the supplies of the English garrison of Stirling about St Bartholomew's day 1299.¹¹ By an inquisition held immediately after his execution, regarding Michael de Miggel, a Scotsman who had been in his company, it was found that Wallace had kept this man, who had tried to escape twice, by force, and in fear of his life.¹

The commission for his trial on 18th August marks the close of his career,² his execution taking place on the 23rd.³ King Edward's harsh treatment of him seems due to personal resentment, for while he had never sworn allegiance, those who had repeatedly violated their fealty were pardoned, favoured, and even trusted.

The King of England now made what he doubtless thought was a final settlement of Scotland,⁴ appointing his nephew, John of Brittany, Warden, with subordinate officers. The sheriffs of counties, with one or two exceptions, were Scots, the castles were committed to Englishmen, or Scots in his interest, and several persons were punished by banishment for certain periods. Orders were given for the courteous treatment of Scottish magnates and others passing through England,⁵ and the High Steward made his submission at Westminster.⁶ Rewards were bestowed on the captors of Wallace, and on Sir John de Menteith,⁷ who, it is right to point out, was at that time and had been for a year before the capture, an official in the English interest, being sheriff and constable of Dunbarton.

With the spring of 1306 dismal news reached King Edward, the murder of Comyn and rebellion of Bruce. That an appearance at least of trusting Bruce was maintained till this event, is shewn by a writ, dated 8th February, two days before the murder, acquitting him of a debt due by his father.⁸ By the 24th of that month Edward had heard the news at Itchenestoke in Hampshire.⁹

With his accustomed energy he appointed Aymar de Valence,

³ Stow's Chronicle. It has been doubted whether this is the correct date, as he was only tried on 23rd August at Westminster. It is to be remembered, however, that his sentence was, to be drawn from the palace of Westminster to the Tower, from the Tower to Allegate, and so by the middle of the City to the Elms (at Smithfield). The probability is, therefore, that immediately after sentence he was carried off straight from Westminster to his doom. In the long summer day there was ample time for this. It is not likely he was brought back, on a subsequent day, from prison, in order to start from Westminster Hall.

Henry de Percy, and Robert de Clifford, to put down the Scots,¹ intending himself to follow, notwithstanding his infirmities, with his son.² The seamen bringing provisions from Ireland were commanded to keep the high seas, and not to approach the Ayrshire or Galloway coasts, the seat of the rising.³ He gave the Annandale estates of Bruce to his son-in-law Humphrey de Bohun earl of Essex,⁴ those in Durham to Robert de Clifford⁵ (with a part subsequently of Christopher de Seton's estate), and committed his other English lands to various persons,⁶ keeping the manor of Writtle for himself.⁷ The earldom of Menteith was given to John de Hastings and Edmund his brother,⁸ that of Lennox to John de Menteith,⁹ of Carrick to Henry de Percy, and Athol to Ralph de Monthermer;¹⁰ and doubtless many other patriots lost their lands, of which there is no record.

At no period of his life is the fiery energy of the King of England more apparent than in these last eighteen months of his life. The writs, often only drafts, are altered and interlined to express his wishes more clearly. He urges his lieutenants to action,¹¹ expresses his gratitude to God for their successes,¹² orders that no terms be kept with the Bishops of St Andrews and Glasgow, but unconditional surrender,¹³ adding his earnest wishes for their capture, and his pleasure on hearing one is taken;¹⁴ gives orders to destroy the lands of ungrateful Scotsmen, but to honour the loyal,¹⁵ and put to death enemies taken in arms, with certain special exceptions, on whose fate he is to be first consulted.¹⁶ Such are a few of the contents of the letters despatched while Edward was slowly making his way to Scotland in June 1306.

The Prince of Wales, leaving his father on the Marches, entered Scotland in July, and we find him on the 13th of that month announcing to Aymar de Valence the surrender of Lochmaben castle two days before,¹ and saying that he will hasten to Perth. He was at Forteviot, within a few miles of it, on 1st August,² and at the end of that month or beginning of next, the castle of Kildrummy surrendered to him, as the jubilant letter of 13th September, giving the names of several of the prisoners, relates.³ Among the chief of these were the King of Scotland's brother [Nigel], Sir Robert de Boyd, Sir Alexander de Lindesay, and others not named. Nigel Bruce was executed, after trial by a special commission, at Berwick.⁴ How the other two escaped a like fate does not appear. The Countesses of Carriek and Buchan, Maria and Christina the sisters, and Margery the daughter, of Bruce, were taken in the sanctuary of St Duthac, at Tain, by the Earl of Ross, and delivered to Edward.⁵ They were placed in strict confinement, three of them in 'kages.'⁶ The Earl of Athol, Simon Fraser, Christopher Seton, and others of note, were executed, the two former at London and the last at Dumfries.⁷ The Bishops of St Andrews and Glasgow and the Abbot of Scone, were sent under a strong escort to the castles of Winchester, Porchester, and Mere in Wilts, being treated with the utmost rigour, and placed in fetters.⁸ He of St Andrews attempted to clear himself of complicity in the murder of Comyn, but his solemn assurance procured him no favour from the incensed King,⁹ and had he and the others been laymen, they would have forfeited their lives.¹⁰ He was interrogated on apprehension, like a felon, by commissioners at Newcastle-on-Tyne, and forced to acknowledge many charges—violation of his oath as a Privy Councillor for one, and the secret indenture with the Earl of Carriek¹¹ (on St Barnabas day 1304), which was found with other compromising documents, in his possession.¹² Charges against him and the two other churchmen were drawn up to be submitted to the Pope.¹³

1306. The Bishop of Glasgow made a request to Edward to be enlarged in England, till the 'ryote' of his countrymen was put down.¹ The Bishop of Moray saved himself by flight to Orkney, where the King of England endeavoured to persuade Haco, King of Norway, to arrest him,² without success. In addition to these stern examples of vengeance, one may be added, hitherto it is believed unknown.³ On 4th August 1306, a special commission at Newcastle-on-Tyne sentenced to death, without trial, fifteen Scotsmen and one Englishman, taken in arms, with one exception, on the field of Methven, which, if we accept the date in the indictment, was fought on Sunday the 26th of the previous June.⁴ Edward's instructions (drawn up by himself at Laysingby near Carlisle, on the 1st of August) were express, that none should be allowed to answer. It cannot be doubted that they all met their doom.⁵ Among them were Alexander le Skyrmyshour, created by Wallace hereditary standard-bearer of Scotland, and John de Seton, 'Englishman.' The latter was captured in Tibbers castle, near Dumfries, and was indicted for aiding in Comyn's murder, and making prisoner the sheriff of Dumfries, Richard Siward. From his style of 'Englishman,' he was probably a brother or near relative of Christopher Seton, who was tried as a native subject of Edward.

We must now turn to the central figure—the new King of Scotland. After his defeat at Methven, Bruce and his small band of adherents, escaping into Athol, lurked for some time there and in the West Highlands, enduring much hardship, from which, when reduced to the extremity of famine among the hills, they were at length rescued by the Earl of Lennox, who till then thought King Robert had been killed at Methven. They then made their way by sea to Kintyre, where Angus of the Isles received them into his castle of Dunaverty, at the extreme south of that peninsula. Fearful of treachery,

Bruce remained only three days within its walls, and with his followers crossed to Rachrin, an island thirteen or fourteen miles to the south-west, about four miles from the north coast of Ireland. From the Records we learn that King Edward acknowledged directly the important services of John of Argyll in pursuit,¹ and that the fugitive was followed so closely by his enemies that Dunaverty castle was under siege on 22nd September,² and had been invested probably some days before. And it is clear his island refuge had been discovered, for on 29th and 30th January 1306-7, there are orders for Hugh Biset and his fleet to join Sir John de Menteith and Simon de Montacute in pursuing Robert Bruce and his accomplices and destroying their retreat.³ On 1st February Edward ordered the sheriff of Cumberland to despatch vessels well manned and armed to Ayr, in search of Bruce, and assist his Admiral, who was at sea on the same duty.⁴ Thus rumours of his return to Scotland (which Barbour says was in early spring), may have preceded the actual event. But it is somewhat unaccountable that Bruce was permitted to remain undisturbed, to all appearance, in Rachrin from September till January. It was within the territories of the powerful family of the Bisets of the Glens of Antrim, who were warm adherents of Edward I., and though the currents and races of these stormy seas are proverbial, they could be no obstacle to hardy mariners. He may, therefore, have been for these mid-winter months, in some more distant refuge.⁵ For Barbour asserts that on reaching Carrick in spring, he for the first time learned the disasters and executions of his friends, from a lady a 'ner eosyn' of his own in that country. The desertion also of some of his principal adherents, the Earl of Menteith, Sir Patrick Graham, and others, in November preceding, was then probably first made known to him.⁶

He must also have then heard of the total defeat of the force of 700 Irishmen, brought to his aid by Thomas and Alexander his brothers, which was cut to pieces on landing (9th February) at Lochryan, by Dougal Macdowall, when the heads of his brothers and Sir Ranald Crawford and other leaders, were placed on the gates of Carlisle.¹ Even his resolute spirit might have quailed at this news, and not less at the unknown dangers yet before him, while he was to be hunted for his life among his native hills.

Whatever may have been the exact date of Bruce's reaching Carrick, early in February the English King must have believed in his arrival, for he writes from his sick-room at Lanercost on 6th and 11th February, ordering a distinct report from Aymar de Valence and his other officers at Ayr, of their doings against the Scots, to be sent to him by a trustworthy messenger, as he believes they are concealing the real state of matters, and have done so badly they do not wish him to know the truth.² At this point Barbour confuses dates, saying that the prisoners from Kildrummy were brought to Edward at Burgh-on-Sands, on his death-bed (July 1307), when he ordered them all to instant execution. Whereas, as we have seen, Kildrummy was taken nearly a year earlier, in September 1306. But his romantic account of Bruce's pursuit by Aymar de Valence with a cavalry force, and John of Lorne (or Argyll) with 800 men 'and ma,' and a bloodhound that once belonged to the fugitive King, is borne out so far by the warrant of 19th July, under the seal of Sir Aymar, then at Dalmolin near Ayr, for pay to Lorne, who with 800 foot, and 22 men-at-arms was then guarding that town.³ So, too, is Barbour's narrative of the failure of Aymar de Valence's attempt to surprise Bruce in his retreat at Glentrool.⁴ On 20th February 1500 Border foot were mustered at Carlisle to pursue him, and on 19th March 1000 from Lancaster, with 1500 more from Cumberland and Westmoreland;⁵ while it is otherwise certain that from 12th February to 3rd May he must have been in a most critical position. On the side of Nithsdale, Sir John Botetourte the warden, was in pursuit with 70 horse and 200 archers. On that of Ayrshire, Sir Aymar de Valence with 700 archers was on his track. Sir Robert de Clifford, with a small detachment, kept guard at the water of Cree; and from Carlisle, 70 horsemen and 40 archers, with 300 Tynedale men under Sir Geoffrey de Moubray, were sent by the English King himself to Glentool in special search of Bruce, between 10th April and 3rd May.¹ A map of the district will show how near he must often have been to his enemies, and that his escapes must have been often narrow. He did, however, extricate himself from the toils, and by the 10th of May (according to Barbour), defeated Sir Aymar de Valence at Loudon Hill, on the border of Ayr and Lanarkshire, nearly thirty-five miles to the north. The date of this action is given by the English historians² as about the end of March, but Barbour's date is supported by two letters, without a year, but dated 15th May. In the first of these,³ from Carlisle, King Edward's anger at the retreat of the Guardian before 'King Hobbe' (as he calls Bruce) is mentioned; also that he had reviewed his cavalry (400 men) decked with leaves, on Whitsunday, and was very merry. The writer adds a curious fact that James of Douglas had sent to be received, but on seeing the English forces retreat [at Loudon Hill] he had drawn back; showing how desperate Bruce's prospects must have been before this success. The second letter,⁴ from Forfar, gives the rumours about Bruce that possibly had been brought from the same fight, and his improved prospects, and the expectation that he might come that way.⁵ From its mention of King Edward's possible death, the editor, with some hesitation, has assigned it to this period, though neither the writer nor person addressed are named. The action of Loudon Hill was not decisive in its effects, for the English operations were going on in a few days after; a foray from Dumfries, in the direction of Cumnock, being 1307. arranged for on 16th May by the Treasurer (the Bishop of Chester) at Dumfries, who had come from Lanark the day before.¹ Bruce Edward I. (Robert I.) is said to have defeated Ralph de Monthermer within three days after Loudon Hill, and besieged him in Ayr castle, but to have retired on succours approaching.² On 1st June, Aymar de Valence, then at Bothwell castle, orders 300 foot for Earl Patrick at Ayr, and workmen for the repairs of the castle.³ He was at Ayr himself ten days afterwards,⁴ from that time till Edward's death, making expeditions into the neighbourhood in search of his late opponent. He was, early in July, on another foray to Carrick and Glentool;⁵ about Ayr from 17th to 19th July;⁶ in the Glenkens (Kirkcudbright) on the 24th;⁷ by the 31st he was back at Skeldon on the Doon, above Ayr;⁸ and was still at Ayr with many knights, Clifford, Hastings, &c., in that month or August.⁹ These writs seem to indicate that Bruce must have been in that district, not in the north of Scotland, at this time, for the Warden would hardly have remained to pursue an inferior foe.

With the death of Edward I. the greatest danger had passed away, and Robert Bruce's career was thenceforth one of steady progress, though toilsome years were to pass before he secured his throne, even by the all but unanimous recognition of his own countrymen.¹⁰

A few words must be said on the seals in the text and Appendices I. and III. There are contained in this volume descriptions of the seals, still extant to the number of about 860, that were attached to the original homages of Scotsmen in 1296. Of these there are about 20 duplicate and borrowed seals, besides a few of Englishmen who had an official connection with Scotland at that time, but all, with scarcely an exception, are of that period.

¹⁰ A strong national feeling is traceable among the commons of Scotland. While most of the magnates, as fear or interest influenced them, were by turns the adherents or opponents of England, the 'mesne men' and commons seem to have steadily refused the inducements held out to them to submit (Nos. 1908, 1909), and were ever ready to rally round the standard of independence.

The seals (86 in number) which have been autotyped¹ by Mr Charles Prætorius are, generally speaking, of excellent design, in a superior kind of wax, many having been appended to important instruments at the time of the Competition for the Crown, or to single homages.² The five plates containing these are numbered at the beginning of Appendix III.

Many of those that follow are also very good, quite equal in execution, but being often joined on tags or strings, were not found suitable for the autotype process. As a rule, the general homage seals are impressed on olive-green coloured wax, and at first sight seem rudely executed. But on careful examination they are extremely interesting, and shew a considerable amount of, we may believe, native art in the designers. The characters of the animals and birds depicted are true to nature, and many of the devices and designs are curious. Many are not armorial, exhibiting the devices of a flower, a shrub, a rabbit, or a bird. A stag's head cabossed, a hunting horn, a star and crescent, are also common. A considerable number, above 100, have baffled the decipherer, and still remain a subject for conjecture. As they have been described with every possible care, shewing how many are attached together, they may be identified by a comparison with the names on the Roll, and a process of induction. By this means many have been definitely, some conjecturally, ascertained.³ The surname of the homager is not always the same as that on his or her seal, and what is singular, seals appear to have been lent, for in several instances the same seal occurs more than once in a homage. It will be noticed on examining the Roll, that the homages were at first made singly by important persons from May to July, and thereafter on 28th August they were made in groups, more or less in number, beginning with the churchmen and magnates, after which landowners, both great and small, are found on the same deed. The seals were probably first affixed, and each made oath in turn touching his or her own seal, after the manner still in use in the execution of English deeds. It is believed that the placing these seals in juxtaposition to the Ragman Roll will supply a want long felt by more than one eminent Scottish antiquary. It has been found impracticable, for the reasons stated above, to make a separate index to them. Where identified or conjectured, however, a reference has been placed to the seal after the name of the owner.

The subject of seals being cognate to that of genealogy, reference may now be made to some genealogical questions on which the documents in the Calendar throw light. Two of some historical interest have been already adverted to.

We discover probably the last appearance of Alan Durward, so prominent in the early years of Alexander III., as still in possession of the castle of Bolsover, on 25th August 1274.¹ It may be noticed that in Nicholas de Soulis' claim to the Crown (in the Great Roll) a slip is committed; his mother, Ermegarda, being there apparently called the daughter and heir of Alexander III. Whereas, it will be seen in the original instrument, that his mother was daughter of Alan Durward, who had married a daughter of Alexander II. Soulis' mother was thus the niece of Alexander III. This partly supplies a missing link in the Durward genealogy. A later Sir Alan Durward is found holding office at Inverness in 1291-92;² and Thomas Durward of Angusshire is on the Ragman Roll.

Alexander III., as the Scottish overlord of the late Walter de Lindesay of Lamberton and Kendal, is found on 23rd September 1274,³ certifying that the re-marriage of Cristiana his widow, to Walter de Percy of Kildale, took place in his kingdom. On 14th June next year, Edward I. condoned Percy's trespass for a fine of 80 marks.⁴

dale, younger brother of Gospatric (II.) and Dolfín, is a singular document.¹ It does not appear what was the object of bastardising these elder brothers, or entering into the fabulous details as to Ranulph de Mesechinis having received the earldom of Karliol from William the Conqueror. In some respects, the latter portion especially, where it treats of Gospatrick of Bolton, and what follows, it is almost identical with the Chronicon Cumbrie,² but the beginning is quite different. Some historical persons are however named, and there seems no reason to discredit the assertion that Duncan King of Scotland married Ethelreda the daughter of Earl Gospatric (I.).

The Molecastres and Penningtons of Cumberland appear to have held Gyffyn in Coningham, probably a grant to one or other family from the de Morvilles.³

Robert de Brus of Annandale, afterwards Competitor, had married as a second wife a Cumberland heiress, Cristiana de Irby, before 1279.⁴ They often appear in the records from this date.

The surname of Lokard or Lokarde (found in Dumfriesshire, in William the Lyon's reign,⁵) occurs as one of seven coparceners, mostly Scottish, in the barony of Levington in Cumberland.⁶

In the inquisition on the death of John Biset junior of Glenarm, whose three co-heiresses are all married to Scotsmen, the island of Rachrin, the future refuge of Robert Bruce, occurs among his possessions.⁷

In the Assize Roll of Werk in Tynedale, details are given of the Comyn family in 1279, showing that John Comyn of Tynedale (father of him whom Bruce killed at Dumfries) had a younger brother John Comyn junior, who was portioned in Thorton in Tynedale.⁸ This younger John appears once again as Sir John Comyn 'le joen,' in 1297,⁹ in contradistinction to his elder brother, there styled Sir John of Badenoch as the head

It also appears that this younger Sir John had a uterine brother Robert and a sister Alicia, shewing that his mother, whose name was Alicia,¹ must have married another Comyn.* This Robert was doubtless the uncle Sir Robert who was killed at Dumfries with his uterine nephew.² It may also be pointed out here that an entry on the Close Rolls establishes the fact, much discussed in the history of the Earldom of Menteith, that Isabella countess of Menteith, wife of William Comyn of Kirkintilloch, was not, as often called, the daughter of Walter Comyn, but of John Russel, the English knight, who was the second husband of Walter Comyn's widow, the elder Countess of Menteith.³

Another piece of evidence about this once great family is afforded by the inquisition on 30th December 1303,⁴ taken before the deputies of the Earl of Carrick, then sheriff of Lanark, wherein it was found that Sir John Comyn (who is styled 'grandfather of Sir John Comyn then living') gave the land of Dalserf in Clydesdale in frank marriage with his daughter to Sir William de Galbrathe, by whom it was given to his own son William and the latter's wife Willelma, daughter of the late Sir William de Douglas, and the four co-heiresses of these last inherited—the eldest being a daughter Johanna, mother of Bernard de Cathe,⁵ then living. While Dalserf was known to have been an early possession of the Comyns, these details of relationship to the Galbraiths and Douglasses seem new.

Cristiana de Valoignes, the heiress of Panmure, appears at Berwick, 10th August 1291,⁶ attending to her affairs. Having been married in 1215 she had reached a great age.

* The following tree will make this more clear :—

On 11th March 1285–86 Edward I. consented to a marriage between John the heir of Athol and a daughter of Sir William de Soules.¹

Eric King of Norway, after a lapse of ten years from the death of Margaret of Scotland, his first Queen, took as his second, Isabella daughter of the elder Robert earl of Carrick, in 1292. The inventory of the valuable robes, jewels, plate, and two crowns, delivered at Bergen, 25th September 1293,² by the envoys of her father for her use, is new. If the mother of Thomas Randolph earl of Moray was, as she is usually called, Isabella, then there were two sisters of the same name. They may have been the children of different marriages.

An interesting point in the pedigree of the Douglasses occurs in the sheriff's return for the lands of Scotsmen in Essex, seized by Edward I. in 1296.³ William de Douglas held lands there in right of the wife whom he abducted at Tranent—Alianora de Ferrars—as dower from her first husband, and among other properties seized was a son of his named Hugh, said to be nearly two years old, and born in England. This boy lived to be for a short time the head of the family, after the death in Spain of his more eminent half brother 'the Good' Sir James.

From a petition for exchange of prisoners on 7th April 1299⁴ it is learned that Marie, successively Queen of Man and Countess of Stratherne, had married a third time, an Englishman, Sir William fitz Waren. She was a daughter of the house of Argyll,⁵ and died before 10th October 1303.⁶

The lineage of the family of Seton, which rose to high rank in Scotland, is illustrated by several documents. In the first of these, John de Seton is found on 4th July 1291, accompanying Edward I. by his special order to St Andrews.⁷ On 6th October 1294, the same John perhaps, (for he had lands in Yorkshire), becomes surety for John Comyn, who had committed an assault on the doorkeeper of Exchequer.⁸ By 11th September 1299, he was dead, leaving lands in the counties of Cumberland and York, his son Christopher being his heir, who was twenty-one years of age on 25th March of that year.¹ By later documents, it appears that the father left a widow named Erminia.² Christopher was thus only twenty-eight when he was executed in 1306.

Robert de Coningham, the slain constable of Carlaverock castle,³ was probably the same who appears on the Ragman Roll as of Ayrshire. The connection between him and James the Steward of Scotland, whose sister was his aunt by marriage, is new to the editor.⁴

Sir John the Steward, next brother of James the High Steward, who fell at Falkirk in 1298, and is generally styled 'of Bonkill,' can only have been so in expectancy, through his marriage to the heiress, Margaret de Bonkill. For Sir Alexander de Bonkill, her father, was alive till shortly before 27th April 1300, when an inquisition of his Cumberland lands was taken, where it is found that his daughter and heir Margaret remains with the enemy in Scotland.⁵ His widow, Crestiene, petitioned Edward I. for dower on 7th June afterwards.⁶ Margaret, his daughter, became the wife of Sir David de Brechin before 7th July 1304, when she and her husband are received to the King's peace.⁷ She was dead before September of that year, when a dispute is recorded in the Register of John de Halton bishop of Carlisle, as having taken place regarding the presentation to the church of Ulvedale in his diocese. It is there stated that her heir by John Steward was a minor, that she had married David de Brechin under a Papal dispensation, and had issue by him, and that he survived her. (9th Report of Commissioners on Hist. MSS., App. p. 181 b.)

At p. 337 a question of some interest in Scottish heraldry is suggested by two seals there described. It has hitherto been supposed that the armorial bearing of three cinquefoils was confined at that period to the family which afterwards took the surname of Hamilton. A seal in the Chapter House collection (App. III., 157) bearing this charge, has accordingly been attributed to Walter fitz Gilbert, their ancestor. The original homage to which it and four others have been appended, has perished, but it can be identified on the Ragman Roll (p. 198), by these four seals, the inscriptions on which are distinct, while on the fifth (that under notice), the words 's' VALTERI DWRAM,' can be read with some difficulty, but certainly not Walter fitz Gilbert. All five belong undoubtedly to a homage by persons from eleven different counties, on which the name, not of Walter fitz Gilbert, but of Walter Duraunt, a Dumfriesshire landowner, occurs. In another homage (p. 199), Walter de Burghdon of Roxburghshire appears, his seal (App. III., 2 (15)) bearing a single cinquefoil. In 1302 a knight of the same Christian and surname was sheriff of Lanark and constable of Carstairs, and in that capacity his seal (p. 337) is appended to his indenture, and bears three cinquefoils. That of Sir William de Duresme (or Durham) sheriff of Peebles (ibid.)¹ bears three cinquefoils on a bend. These coincidences are somewhat remarkable. The de Burghdons were a Northumberland family, from which county some have thought the Hamiltons also came.

⁴ There is no mention of it in Douglas's Peerage of Scotland (art. Gleneairn). The Robert de Coningham who swore fealty to Edward I., is there said to have declared for

Several references occur, illustrating the connection of the Campbell family with Ayrshire. Robert de Kethe, who appears to have been a speculator in wardships,² complained that Sir Nigel Cambel had taken possession of the ward of the two daughters of Andrew de Crawford, which the complainant had bought from John Balliol while King. Sir Nigel appears further to have married the younger of these daughters, and Crawford's estate seems to have been the barony of Longemertenock in Ayrshire (p. 425). Sir Nigel is found afterwards in possession of the ward of the heir of Hubert de Multon,³ with the King of England's license to marry the widow. He was dead before 25th

October 1305,¹ when the ward of his son, a minor, is given to Sir John de Dovedale. It has generally been said that Sir Nigel Cambel married one of the sisters of the Earl of Carrick. If so, she must have been an earlier wife than either of these ladies, or the Colin Cambel, Bruce's nephew, who is named by Barbour as being rebuked sharply by his uncle for his rashness in the Irish campaign of 1317, could hardly be the son of this Sir Nigel, who is the only knight of that name occurring in the records at this date.²

In June 1304,³ Sir Patrick de Dunbar son of the Earl of March, receives a cask of new wine for his wife, Lady Ermigarda, then pregnant. This marriage is hitherto unknown, and it is uncertain who the lady was. If this Patrick was he who succeeded his father in 1309, and was the last of the line of earls named Patrick, the only wife assigned to him is the celebrated Black Agnes, daughter of Thomas Randolph earl of Moray, whom he married about 1323.

Many of the documents in this volume are undated, and those often not the least valuable as tending to throw light on the acts and motives of some of the chief persons of the time. This has caused much thought and labour in endeavouring to fit such writings into their proper places. Some perhaps could now be more properly placed, though, on the whole, the editor thinks they have been arranged with a fair approximation to chronological sequence.

The editor has, in concluding, to repeat his acknowledgments to the Master of the Rolls, and Sir William Hardy, the Deputy-keeper, for the great facilities afforded him in consulting the Public Records under their charge, as well as to their assistant officers, Mr Selby especially, who is always ready to solve a difficulty when such occurs.

The K. unwilling to injure Eustace, commands the escheator to inquire, and if the facts are so, to give him seisin of all his late wife's lands, and the 'mesne profits,' chiefly as he ought not to suffer damage or loss through Thomas's acting by 'subreption' of the court. Nov. 10. 9. The K. to his Barons and bailiffs of Winchelsea. It has been shewn to him on behalf of Thomas Ker, John of Aberdene, and Walter de La Bothc, merchants of Aberdene, that while lately on a voyage from Aberdene to St Omer in their vessel freighted with wool and other goods, John Adryan of Winchelsea, at sea near Yarmouth, took from them 56½ sacks of wool, 5½ 'daces' of ox hide, 150 salmon, 200 'bords' of oak, a trussel of deer's hide, and lambs' skins, and much other merchandise, and still detains these at Winchelsea, besides beating and evil entreating them and their servants, so that the lives of some were despaired of. And as Thomas and John have sworn on the Gospels that the wool and others belong to themselves and other merchants of Aberdene, and were shipped there, and that no Fleming or other subject of the Countess of Flanders is concerned in same, the K. commands that they have restitution of their goods without delay, to be carried where they will, except to Flanders.  a fine of 100 marks, and after the late K.'s death, and the K.'s peace had been proclaimed while he was yet beyond seas, Gilbert, by his wife Elizabeth, and his men, extorted 10l. from the complainant, by threats of burning his house and goods, pulled down his house in Doctrees, and, cutting out the timber, did his will with it, and drove two heifers of Walter's and their sequela, from his common pasture, to his forest of Redesdale, and marked them with his own 'iron brand,' and yet detains them. And since the K. has taken Walter, his men, which the latter's messengers the bearers will declare viva voce; on whose behalf he has already written. Giving such effect to his intervention that the Steward may rejoice thereat. Roxburgh, 14 Nov., 27 of his reign. [Royal Letters, No. 1278.]

EDWARD I. 61. These are the demands of Alexander the Steward of Scotland, ——— to our lord the K. of England by his messengers.

1275. The Steward relates how he bought from 'mi sire' Edward, now Nov. 14. K., the ward of the land of Skipton in Craven, for 1500*l.* sterling, then held by Sir Simon de Montfort, and as Sir Edward wished the Steward to have immediate seisin, he caused him to grant his letter patent, binding himself to pay 500*l.*, but not having [the ward] has not yet paid a penny. Nor could the Steward have seisin, for Earl Simon did not hold the ward for more than a year after the sale, to the Steward's great damage. The Steward came to the country and paid to 'mi sire' Jon le Bretun 1061*l.* 16*s.* sterling; and to a 'vallet' whom Ingeram had, 400 marks to pay merchants at the fair of Lynn, by view of 'misires' Rou Dunnyng and Williame de Salynis. Meanwhile he was attorned by 'mi sire' Edward to pay 300 marks to Sir Richard de Bedeford; who lent them to him on condition, that if not paid at a certain day and term, he should lose all he had paid for the ward of Skipton. Having granted his letter to Richard to this effect, 200 marks were duly paid to Richard, but the third 100 could not be, for the Steward's letter had been delivered to 'mi sire' Edward, who did his will with the ward under the above condition, but did not refuse the Steward's messenger, for he was attorned also to pay for 'mi sire' Edward to Benard Nicholas and Arnulph Griffin 66 or 68 'livres,' which money was never paid by the Steward, in misprision by him of 'misire' Edward and the merchants. It must also be remembered how the Steward on his way to England to 'mi sire' Edward, to agree with said merchants for the debt, was robbed between Blye (Blyth) and Tuckisford of nearly 500 marks sterling, and lost all his horses and harness, and was detained by Robert de Wyleby till he got a fine from him. But since this is all passed, the Steward, who has spent and lost much about this ward, humbly prays our Lord the K. for his grace in a ward or marriage to him or any of his children that he be not a loser. 'Kar pleder ne weut, mes le resun hust.'
 He puts himself in the K.'s grace and asks a written answer by the messenger. Norman French. [Royal Letters, No. 1788.]

Dec. 29. 62. Alexander [III.] K. of Scots to the K. He has received his letter as to collecting the aid for him within his liberty of Tyndalle, but cannot reply thereto plainly without first consulting his magnates.
 Will do so as quickly as possible, and send his answer. Brechyn, 29th December, 27th of his reign. [Royal Letters, No. 1317.]

[1275.] 63. The K. of Scotland's Petitions:—

First. The ward of Sir Henry de Hastings' lands within the liberty of the earldom of Huntingdon, as freely as his predecessors held it by their charters. Let him shew them.

Second. Regarding the [manor?] of Wheteley in Nottingham

EDWARD I. 'the process whereof we deliver to you.' Let him shew the same.

1275. Third. Regarding [100 acres and more ?] of his land enclosed in the park of Plumton.

Fourth. Regarding the park of Morton closed by Thomas de Normanville, in circuit about 10 'leucas,' wherein the men of his manors in Cumberland had common with their swine all the year, in wood and plain, or lawns, except in the fence month. Appears to have been enclosed, as the K. had the escapium of the K. of Scotland's animals taken in the lawns.

Fifth. Regarding the 100s. daily which the K. of Scotland is wont to have on all his visits to the K. of England's Court, and stay there. He does not come at the K.'s mandate, but to do his devoir to the K.

In the above petitions the K. of Scotland seeks, with his justice, grace and favour.

He also asks for his men :—

First. That Alexander de Ergadia's vessel, captured with goods at Bristol to the value of 160 marks, be released. Granted, as it seems right.

Second. For a burgess of Lethe in Scotland poulded in 'Le 'Hulle' for Sir John Cumyn, by John de St Nicholas and Robert de Mikelgate, burgesses of York; who lost thereby 100*l.* sterling. Let him be delivered as seems just.

Third. That the Charter by H. K. of England, of happy memory, to the burgesses of Berwick, be confirmed by the K. The K. will do what is fitting. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 413.]

Much defaced.

[Circa
1275.] 64. [Memorandum regarding the Descendants of Waldeve lord of Allirdale, younger brother of Gospatrick (II.) and Dolfin, and of his nephew William fitz-Duncan earl of Murray.]

Earl Cospatryk, formerly earl of Dunbar in Scotland, had a brother, Dolfin earl of Northumberland, who, both being bastards, had a legitimate brother Waldeve, and a legitimate sister Etheldreda. Waldeve and Etheldreda were of one father and one mother. After Ranulph de Meschinis came to England with William Bastard the Conqueror, that King gave him all the land from the place called Rere Crosse upon Staynmora, as far as the river towards Scotland called Sulewaht [Solway] to the true marches there between England and Scotland. And the said Ranulph was then created Earl of Karliol. Ranulph gained the forsaid Waldeve as an ally on account of the war between the Scots and England, as he was a Scotsman, and gave him for his service the whole Barony of Allerdale, from the place called Wahtelpole as far as Derwent, saving to himself all his venison.

EDWARD I. ¶ The said Waldeve gave to Odard de Logys seneschal of Ranulph de Meschinis, the vavassory of Wygetona with its townships and their 1275. pertinent, for his service, doing to him the service of cornage, 'forynsec,' pannage. Odard founded the church of Wygetona in said forest.

¶ Waldeve also gave to Melbeht, his servant who came into the country with him, the whole vill of Bramfield, saving to himself the advowson of the church.

To Waldeve succeeded his son and heir Alan, who was under age and in the ward of K. David of Scotland, who held the land of Cumbria (for there was war between K. Henry, not yet King, nephew of said David, and son of the Empress Matilda, and Stephen the King, uncle of the aforesaid K. Henry), and on obtaining majority obtained all his father's land in Allerdale.

¶ Alan had a bastard brother on his father's side, by name Cospatryk, to whom he gave the township of Bolton within the forest, and Bastenthwyte outside the forest, and Hestholm in Derwen-watre.

¶ And the said Alan gave, with the 'corpse present of his son,' the Holy Rood of Karliol and the church of Aspatrik, and the service of the ancestors of John de Brayton in the same forest, and the church of Crosseby, and the fourth part of the said vill which Uhtred formerly held 'in the forest and out forest,' the church of Hyrby, and the service of Ysac de Yrby's ancestors in Ysacby.

¶ The said Allan superenfeoffed his knight Utred son of Lyolf, in the vill of Aylewardby, which Thomas de Louther and Peter de Dayneurt now hold.

¶ And William fitz Duncan, formerly earl of Murreve [Moray] nephew of said Alan, begotten of Etheldreda sister of his father Waldeve, succeeded to Alan.

¶ The said William held the whole barony of Allerdale, except Palmeastr' which is land in the forest at present, on account of the war moved between the K. of Scotland and the said William, who had espoused Alicia de Rumeley daughter of Robert de Rumeley lord of Scyptona, who had formerly espoused the daughter of William de Meschinis lord of Couplande.

¶ The said William begot of his said wife William 'the Boy of 'Egermund' who died in minority; and three daughters, the first of whom; Cecilia, was married, with the honour of Scyptona, to William the Gross earl of Albemarle, by the foresaid Henry, then King of England, being in the K.'s custody as a minor; and the second, Amabillis, was married to Reginald de Lucy with the honour of Egermund, by the K. in her minority; and the third, viz., Alicia de Rumeley, was married to Gilbert Pypard of the K.'s household, with the Honour of Cokermu, by the K. in her minority.

¶ William fitz Duncan's son thus dying in minority, the three

EDWARD I. daughters were in ward of K. Henry, grandfather of K. Henry [III.] who now lately was. The eldest, who was married to William the Gross earl of Albemarle, was succeeded by Hawysia her daughter and heir, to whom William de Fortibus earl of Albemarle succeeded, and to him William who lately was. And to him succeeded Avelyna his daughter and heir, whom the Lord Eadmund, brother of the illustrious K. Edward, espoused. Avelyna [is] dead without an heir. The second, Amabyllis, who was married by the K. to Reginald de Lucy, was succeeded by Richard de Lucy, to whom have succeeded Amabillis and Alicia de Lucy. The third was married by the K. to Gilbert Pypard, who died without an heir; and the K. H[enry II.] died, and Richard his son was afterwards created King and went to the Holy Land. And Queen Elyanora his mother married the said Alicia to Robert de Curteney, knight, her 'cognatus,' who held the whole Barony of Allerdale all K. Richard's life, and in K. J[ohn's] time, until he died without an heir.

And it is to be noted that when the war was moved between the King of Scotland and William fitz Duncan (the father of Cecilia, Amabillis, and Alicia), Roger Goky, who was with the K., presented himself and begged from him for his service the land of St Hilda in Ingylwode, which the K. gave him of the heritage of these sisters, and he held it for almost 30 years and more. And at the close of his life he became a 'conversus' of the Abbey of Holm, and before his death they [the monks?] came to K. J[ohn], who granted it to them as the said Roger Goky formerly held it, Robert her husband being alive. So that for the present no right should pass. [*Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No.*⁴⁵⁹₃.]

Perhaps a statement by the monks of Holmcoltram, see vol. i., No. 615.

1275-76. 65. As R[obert] bishop of Dunblane in the K.'s presence empowered Robert Robery, and William son of Walter de Rotington, to appoint attorneys in his name in all his pleas, the K. of his special grace commands his bailiffs and others accordingly during the Bishop's life. By the K. in presence. Queryntone. [Patent, 4 Edw. I. m. 30.]

- Aldenestone. Memorandum:—on inspecting the rolls of Roger de Turkelby and other justices itinerant in the county 31 Hen. III., it was found that Sir Richard de Levingtone, and William de [m. 27.] Dakre, then sheriff of Cumberland, were sent by them to Aldenestone to hear and determine pleas of the Crown according to the customs of the mine there, and the old liberties of the miners; and as no mention was made of said mine before the present justices, inquisition was made by them before the knights, stewards of magnates, and suitors of the county now assembled, how, when, and by whom,

EDWARD I. the said mine was alienated from the King of England. Who say ——— on oath that this was done by one Ralph de Levington, who held the 1278-79. manor of Aldenestone in farm from one Nicholas de Veteripont,
 Nov. 3- who, when Ralph's lease ended, and the manor was again in his own Jan. 16. seisin, and likewise Robert de Veteripont, his son, the present owner, have hitherto continued the said alienation, and the latter permitted the King of Scotland's coroner of Tindale to act, whereas the sergent of the mine, on behalf of the K. of England, should have acted as coroner by law, as more fully shewn in the Crown pleas of the last iter. They say also that very many evil-doers of Cumberland and elsewhere are harboured there. And when the said Robert learned that the justices were on their way to these parts, he removed all the evil-doers so resetted, especially one John son of Sireda de Bosco who killed Adam, son of Adam son of Martin of Laysingby. And as Robert does not appear to answer to the K., it was decided that the mine and liberty should be taken in the K.'s hand. The justices also order that Sir Hugh de Muleton of Hof, and Robert de Wardewik should be sent there to hear and determine Crown pleas of the mine that had emerged since the last justice eyre. Who, making oath were sent to Aldenestone on Monday next after the Feast of St Hilary last to try the same. And in the 5th week after Easter, before the justices at Appelby, Robert came and acknowledged that the mine belonged to the K. of England, and he claimed nothing therein.
 Whereon the K. commanded that the record and process should be sent to him in the octaves of Trinity, and Robert be then attached by the sheriff to answer for his trespass. Robert and the sheriff being accordingly present, Robert was delivered by the justices to the sheriff in form. The justices wishing further information, two of their number taking with them the Sheriffs of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and a quorum of knights and good men of these counties, made stricter inquiry on Robert de Veteripont's right, and also the true bounds between Aldenestone and Tyndale, which they viewed and considered by eye-witness in respect that certain bailiffs of the King of Scotland of Tyndale came before them at Carlisle and said that Aldenestone was within the said King's liberty of Tyndale; by which inquisition it was found that the ancestors of Nicholas and Robert had no ingress to Aldenestone by any charter of the King of Scotland's ancestors, as they claimed; but that one Ivo de Veteripont

Pleas of the Crown from the corpus Comitatus. The jury present that the barony of Dalston and advowson of the church was an escheat to the K. by one Hervic fitz Maurin, convicted of felony. The late K. Henry gave it to Walter Mauclerk, bishop of Carlisle, 43 years ago. The Bishop holds a certain land near Dalston, viz., Cumberland and Caldecot, but whether it is of the barony of Dalston, or demesne of Carlisle Castle, they know not. As the see is vacant, and the barony in the King's hand, to be spoken about.

[m. 32.] ¶ The jury say that the manors of Penreth, Soureby, Langwatheby, Salkeld, Scotteby, and Karlton were in the late K. Henry's hands as a pertinent of his castle of Carlisle, and the King of Scots now holds them by gift of the late K.; and his father held 40 years past as they believe. They say that Little Salkeld was demesne of K. Richard, who gave the vill to one Adam le Sauser, to be held by service of 6 marks yearly. And the late K. Henry gave that service to one Walter bishop of Carlisle, who afterwards with the K.'s consent enfeofed the Prior and convent of the Blessed Mary of Carlisle therein; and the Prior has now proffered a charter attesting this. They say also that the isle of Holm Coltram was the demesne of K. Henry senior, who founded that Abbey. The Abbot of Holm Coltram proffers that K.'s charter to this effect. He has also confirmations by Kings Richard, John, and Henry the K.'s father. That the site of the Priory of Carlisle was the demesne of K. Henry senior, who founded the same in pure almoigne there now 180 years ago, as more fully in his charter. That the vill of Newton Renny was the K.'s ancient demesne, and one Akena, widow of William de Renny, holds five parts of it as dower, and Robert Burnelle holds the sixth part of the K. in capite, by the service of finding an esquire in the K.'s army of Scotland, with a hawberk and helmet at his own charges for 40 days, for the whole tenement; and the jury being asked who are William de Renny's heirs, do not know.

¶ Concerning fees:—They say that Thomas de Multone of Egermund holds that manor with the barony of Coupelaund of the K. as one fee. The Countess of Albemarle holds the manor of Cokermouth in dower of the K. through the Earl of Albemarle's death. Alicia de Lucy holds the moiety of that manor in capite of the K. by homage and service. The Countess aforesaid holds in dower the manor of Pabecastre with the moiety of the barony of Allerdale,

EDWARD I. through the Earl's death, by cornage. Matillidis de Vaus holds the manor of Erthingtone with the barony of Gilleslaunde of the K. as a fee of two knights. Baldewin Wake holds the manor and barony of 1278-79. Lydel of the K. by cornage. The Bishop of Carlisle holds the manor Nov. 3- and barony of Linstoke in almoigne. Geoffry de Tyllol holds the Jan. 16. manor of Scaleby and the barony of Houghton of the K. by cornage. Thomas de Moltone of Burgh holds the manors of Burgh, Ayketone, Kirkeosewalde and the barony of Burgh of the K. by cornage. William son of Thomas de Creystoke holds the manor and barony of Creystoke of the K. by cornage. Walter de Wygetone holds the manors of Melmorby, Blachale, and Heyntone, with the barony of Melmorby, of the K. by cornage. William Lokard, Walter de Twynham, Walter de Corry, Patrick de Suthayk, Patrick Trump of Karrik, [] wife of Roland de Karrik, and Richard de Kirkebride, hold the barony of Levingtone of the K. by cornage. Richard de Kirkebride is under age, and should be in the K.'s custody; and his land is worth 12*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* yearly. [Walter de Wygetone here shows his title to the heir's ward from Thomas de Normanville, the K.'s seneschal, through one Roger Mynot; and that he had given the heir in marriage by the K.'s leave; and is ordered by the Court to verify this by the quinzaine of Hilary.]

Robert de Brus and Cristiana his wife hold the manors of Gamelesby and Glassanby of the K. by cornage.

¶ Suits withdrawn. These vills were wont to make suit at the county, which has been withdrawn from the time of K. John, by John de Ireby who was of his retinue; and Robert de Brus and Cristiana his wife now hold. To be spoken about.

¶ Those who claim returns, &c., besides the K.:—Thomas de Moltone, lord of Egremund within Couplaunde, has return of writs, and holds pleas de namio vetito and takes wreck of sea everywhere in his lands, and has gallows and takes fines of assize of bread, ' &c,' and he and his ancestors have so had it from the Conquest, ' &c.'

[m. 32,
dorso.]

¶ The K. of Scotland claims to have return of writs, and holds pleas de namio vetito and has gallows in his lands, and takes fines of assize of bread and beer; by the late K. Henry's charter. They say also that all holding of the said K. of Scotland by barony, have gallows in their lands, except Geoffry Tyllol; from what time they know not.

¶ They present that the K. of Scotland's bailiffs of Penrith and elsewhere in Cumberland, use the said king's liberties illegally, each bailiff in any of his manors poinding whoever of the country he pleases for the debt of any complainant, though not principal debtor nor pledge; and this they do both to strangers as well as those who hold of said king. This liberty to be taken in the K.'s hand. And if a stranger is attached at the King of Scotland's court for any delict done outside of his liberty, and the lord of such person attends to

EDWARD I. challenge the court on behalf of his man, he is not allowed, '&c.'
 ——— And these were the King of Scotland's bailiffs, viz., William de 1278-79. Swineburne, Roger de Boteneumbe, John de Swineburne, William

 Jan. 16. trial regarding them.

¶ The jury present that the King of Scotland's bailiffs will not answer before the justices appointed to hold and decide assizes of novel disseisin and other trespasses, but only before the K.'s justices for all pleas, and thus they hinder justice, and subvert the royal authority. To be spoken of.

¶ The jurors of Lyth and Eskedale, and of Cumb', and Allerdale, make a presentment regarding the great destruction in the waters of Edene and Esk and others in the county, of salmon coming up to spawn, and likewise of the young fry going down to the sea. Therefore the whole county, knights and freeholders, unanimously determined that from Michaelmas to St Andrew's day, no net shall be drawn or placed at weirs, pools, or mills, or mill pools, and that none fish in the above or any other waters in the county, with nets 'sterkilds,' or other engine, within said close time; or without engine. Also that from the feast of the apostles Philip and James till the Nativity of St John Baptist, no net or 'wile' or 'borache' shall be placed at pools or mills or mill pools in said waters, nor any net placed at weirs, save by the conservators hereafter appointed, and the meshes shall be wide enough to let the salmon fry through, viz., of four thumbs' length. It is provided also that so often as any fisher or miller, or other person, infringes this provision and is convicted, he shall be sent to the K.'s prison and not repledged, unless by consent of the conservators.

The jurors likewise attest that Thomas de Moltone of Gilleslaunde, as his ancestors have done from time immemorial, takes fines from all illegal nets in the water of Edene at a place called Pell . . . urg, by view of knights and others appointed to the custody of the waters; but if the K.'s bailiffs have arrived, then the judgments pertain to the K. for that turn. To be inquired into.

It is also provided that all 'boraches' at mills on said waters shall henceforth be removed, under forfeiture to the K. of 40s. by him whose they are, for each conviction. And there should be no more in these waters than three small nets by custom, the meshes whereof, with a knot, should be of three thumbs' length, for catching lampreys; and none should fish with these except from the Feast of St Andrew till the quinzaine next before the Feast of St John Baptist. The K., in his castle of Carlisle, shall have one; the citizens of Carlisle another in their pool at the garden leased to the city for 15*l.*, in which none shall fish without leave of the citizens; and if more nets are found, they may be put down by the conservators. The jurors present, and the whole county complains, that the Prior of St Bega (St Bees) has

EDWARD I. two engines called 'cupe' for catching salmon in his pool of Stayn— burn, where in times past he had but one; and the other was set up 1278-79. six years ago, without warrant and after the last justice eyre. There-
 Nov. 3- fore he is in amercement. The Sheriff is ordered to remove the second
 Jan. 16. 'cupa' at sight of the jury, at the Prior's expense. It is ordered that in each pool of the Edene, Esk, and Derwent, and other waters where salmon may be taken, in mid-stream, by old custom, there shall be a pass wide enough for a sow with her five pigs; and as the following are unduly narrowed, viz., at Cokermouth, Cambertone, Staynburne, and Wyrkingtone, these openings shall be so enlarged at view of the jury, at the cost of those who contracted them. These are the conservators chosen by consent of the whole county for said waters, viz., Robert de Quysterig, Walter de Bamptone, Richard de Stokes, Bertin de Turstanfeld, William de Uthardesby, Adam de Tynemuthe, Adam de Thoresby, John son of Elyas, Henry de Sabluns, Robert de Etardeby, Richard Soor, Adam Rud of Brins-cayth; who shall all make oath before the justices faithfully to discharge their office as above. And if any one die, or become infirm, or unfit for office, the others shall elect another who shall make oath before the Sheriff in his room. The nets and engines found on the waters contrary to the above provisions shall be burned in presence of the conservators. These provisions shall endure in perpetuum to the good of the whole county and others adjacent.

[m. 33.] ¶ They say that William de Boyville, sub-escheator of Master Robert de Clifford, took 5 marks from the executors of Eustace de Balliol, for having administration; and Henry his clerk took a mark from them; and likewise at Kirkosewald 9 bushels of wheat.

¶ And William de Boyville took from some of the heirs of Helewisa de Balliol 6 marks to give them a better part [of the heritage]; and took 100s. from Thomas de Multone to delay making the inquisition which the heirs of Eustace de Balliol had. To be spoken of.

¶ They say that [among others] John de Swynburne the sheriff, the K. of Scotland's bailiffs, those of the Baron of Kreystok, William Locard, Robert de Brus, Geoffry de Muntbray, Baldewin Wake, Geoffry Tyllol, Walter de Carrik, and David de Torthorald, have amerced freemen in their lords' courts without their peers and contrary to statute. All in amercement.

[m. 33,
 dorso.] Kirkosewald:—The jury present that one John del Wod who slew a man, was lodged in the prison of Laysingby; and by night, persons unknown from Scotland, rescued him, wounding his keepers, and fled to Scotland. The township followed them with 'hue and cry,' but could not take them. And after the coroner had held an inquisition, Richard de Creppingges held another by ignorant persons, and made them represent as he pleased, in fraud of the vill of

EDWARD I. Laysingeby, taxing them to make a fine of 15 marks with him. To be seen about. Assize Roll(Cumberland), 6-20 Edw. I. $\frac{M}{1}$ $\frac{24}{24}$ } 3.]

1278-79. 147. Pleas at Aldenestone before Hugh de Maletone and Robert de
Jan. 16. Wardewyk, sent there by John de Vaux and the other justices itinerant at Carlisle, on Monday next after the Feast of St Hilary, 7th of the K.'s reign.

Simon son of Adam, bailiff, juror. Electors, Walter del Crag, Robert de Blagate, jurors [and 10 other jurors].

[Extracts.]

[m. 34.] Nicholas Prest crossing Tyne water at Gerardesgyle on a feeble horse, fell off, and was drowned. Simon del Bank, first finder, is dead. No one suspected. Judgment, misadventure. Value of the horse 5s., which John de Cokedene, formerly bailiff of the king of Scotland's liberty, received, who is dead, and has no heir nor executors, in the K. of England's power. Therefore from the deodand nichil. And Gilbert de Grendone deceased, the King of Scotland's coroner in Tyndale, usurped that office against the liberty of the K.'s miners of Aldenestone, for it pertains to the sergeant of the mine by the ancient miners' liberties. To be spoken of.

¶ William Hyne, driving a stob in the ground to make a hedge in Gerardesgyle, struck it with a mallet which slipped from his hands and fell on the head of one Elewald, who died thereof on the third day after. Misadventure. Value of the mallet $\frac{1}{2}d$. The King of Scotland's bailiffs sent one Odard de Rydeley, his coroner of Tyndale (since dead), to view Elewald's body in prejudice of the miners' liberty. To be spoken of.

¶ They present that Ralph de Levingtone, deceased, while he held Aldenestone moor in farm from Nicholas de Veteripont, removed the K.'s gallows in Aldenestone mine from a place called Arnesethou to a place called Bales. And Robert de Veteripont, son and heir of Nicholas, does justice there on robbers condemned in his court of Aldenestone, contrary to the liberty of the mine, by what warrant is unknown. To be spoken of.

¶ The jury [after stating that Robert and his father Nicholas had received and not accounted for the goods and chattels of certain outlaws and robbers hanged and beheaded; and that they had appropriated free warren and chace within the mine, by what warrant was not known] present, that Robert had closed a road leading from Aldenestone to Gossipesgate, where horse and footmen were wont to pass without hindrance, to the hurt of the whole mine. He is in amercement. The road is ordered to be thrown open at Robert's cost at view of the jury.

¶ They present that Robert, Laurence, and Alan de Veteripont [and others] were absent primo die. Therefore in amercement.

¶ That Robert 'resetted' one John de Bosco, a fugitive from Cum-

EDWARD I. berland, before the justices' arrival. Therefore John to be tried, and put in the 'exigent' for the county. That Robert resetted no other fugitive or evil-doer.

1278-79. Jan. 16. § John Baret, taken on suspicion of burglary of the house of Agnes widow of John son of Henry, and stealing the crop of Laurence de Veteripont, and robbing a woman unknown, at Croserin, and Robert of Naterys, taken on suspicion of stealing a cow of Nicholas de Veteripont, came and placed themselves on 12 jurors of the mine, and were acquitted.

§ John, son of Aldericha, complains that William de Belingham, the King of Scotland's bailiff, imprisoned him for 40 days at Werk till he got a ransom of 20s. from him, and asks amends. William defends, and is acquitted by 12 jurors of the mine. John amerced for a false claim. The jurors say that Robert de Veteripont sent him to prison at Werk, till he paid 20s., because he said he was the K. of England's man. Therefore a trial as to Robert.

§ The Prior of Hexham now has the advowson of the church of Aldenestone by gift of Ivo de Veteripont. It should be in the K. of England's gift. To be spoken of.

§ They present that the K. should receive each ninth 'disc' dug by the miners. And each 'disc' should contain as much ore as a man can lift from the ground. And as to the remaining 8 'discs,' the K. should have the 15th penny of all the ore sold. The K. shall find at his expense for said miners, a certain man called 'Driver' who knows how to separate silver from lead. The jury, being asked the annual value of the mine, say they cannot know till it is working, and as they shall find the ore good. And say that there is ore enough to last till the end of time. That Ralf de Levingtone, the lessee of Aldenestone, first hindered them mining; and afterwards they began in the time of Nicholas de Veteripont, who in like manner hindered them. [Assize Roll (Cumberland), G-20 Edw. I. $\frac{M}{24}$ } 3.]

William Comyn absent. Amerced, and the assize goes by default. The jury find for the plaintiff. The court orders the pool to be levelled at the defendant's cost, and view of the jury. Damages 2s.

[m. 6, § John de Leuerhilde appears versus William Comyn and John dorso.] de Graham, in a plea that they assaulted him at Jedeworthe, beat,

Jan. 20. The township of Feltone came by 12 [jurors].

[m. 11.] ¶ Concerning ladies:—they say that Alicia de Balliol is in the K.'s gift. She is not yet married. They do not answer to the 'capitula' except as above.

[m. 11, The township of Alnewik came by 12 [jurors].

dorso.] ¶ Simon of Scotland, imprisoned at Alnewik for stealing a work-horse, by night broke prison, slew Robert the jailor of the castle and Andrew the thrasher there, took the keys of the castle gate, and opening it, fled to the church of Alnewik, acknowledged his deed and abjured the kingdom before the coroner. The jurors attest that the castle is John de Vescy's. Therefore a trial for the escape against John. Simon's chattels 14*d.*; the sheriff to answer. The jurors in amercement for concealing part of them. *John de Vescy fined 8*l.* for escape (m. 19, dorso).*

The township of Morpathe on behalf of the county citra Coket came by 12 [jurors].

¶ A man unknown was housed at Morpathe with Geoffry and William the mercers of Scotland. The stranger rose through the night and stole their goods to the value of 30*s.*, and instantly fled to Cotinwode, followed by William, who slew him in his flight. Both withdrew themselves and are not miscredited. They may return if they will, but their chattels are confiscated for flight. They have none.

The township of Corebridge came by 12 [jurors].

¶ Richard, son of Richard the smith, killed David de Graham in the town of Corebridge, and fled to the church of St Andrew, acknowledged the deed, and abjured the realm before the coroner. His chattels 11*s.* 6½*d.* The town of Corebridge in amercement for not taking him.

[m. 12.] ¶ The jury present that the heirs of Muschampe hold their barony by service of four knights, and making suit to the county at Newcastle. Robert de Ros of Helmeleye holds the barony of Werk by service of a knight's fee and suit as above. Earl Patrick holds his serjeanty in Northumberland by being 'in-borwe et ut-borewe ad merk et mere,' between the kingdoms, paying at the exchequer of Newcastle 30*s.* and suit as above.

[m. 13.] ¶ The county records that the Prior of Tynemue, the Archbishop of York, Gilbert de Umfraville, the King of Scotland, the Bishop of Durham, ought to receive the 'capitula' of the coroner from the justices sent here; and according to these to hold pleas in their liberties; whereon the bailiffs of the Prior, the Archbishop, Gilbert and the K. of Scotland came and asked the 'capitula,' which were delivered to them.

EDWARD I. The part of the county on the north beyond the water of Coket ——— came by 12 [jurors].

1278-79. § Alicia, widow of Robert de Coupelande, who appeals in the Jan. 20. county Gervase Avenel, John his son, Gervase his brother, and others, of rape and breaking the K.'s peace, is absent, and only sued at three courts. Let her be taken; and her two pledges are in amercement.
 John de Brankistone only appeared, who defended and was acquitted.
The other defenders are in amercement.

[m. 14.] § Concerning defaults:—They say that Edmund the K.'s brother, John de Vescy, William Comyn of Kilbride, Thomas de Graham, William de Colville, William de Somerville [and others] were absent primo die. Therefore in amercement.

§ They present,—that whereas the mid-stream of Twede should be the true boundary between the realms of England and Scotland, the Berwick burgesses appropriate the whole water, and in netting claim the entire solum up to high tide mark, and attachments of water should be made by the Bishop of Durham's bailiffs, or those of the K., sede vacante.

[m. 15,
 dorso.] § Dyonisia de Bechefed complains that Roger de Inhou, William de Swethoppe, John his brother, Walter de Swethoppe, and others, when she was on the moor of Mildeburne on Monday next before the Feast of St Bartholomew, in the 56th year of K. H[enry], on the royal way there near Opintele bridge, instigated by the said Walter de Swethoppe, carried her off vi et armis to the liberty of Redisdale, to a place called Ilishache, where Walter was seneschal, where they kept her that night, to compel her to take Richard his son for her husband, and threatening, unless she consented, to carry her off to Scotland for ever. And as she utterly refused, they carried her off to Gedeworth in Scotland, and detained her there for a day and night, till she was rescued by Master John de Pampingham her uncle, and other friends.
 But she dared not return to England for fear of Roger and the others, until she and her friends agreed with one William son of Ralph, chief forester of Redesdale, for 10*l.*, to conduct her safely through his lord's territory to England. When they had reached Hyrdbotil, Walter de Swethoppe caused them to be attached by the constable of the castle, to find two pledges to answer in the court of Hyrdbotil why she had entered his lord's liberty vi et armis in contempt. And as she did not appear there to answer to the trespass, her pledges were amerced in 10*l.*, which she paid. She claims damages of 200*l.*

The defendants plead that they should not answer, as she appealed them of a felony in the county for said trespass, of which they were acquitted; and being asked if they had anything to say to quash the present accusation? said No, but referred to the records, where it appeared that she appealed them of an almost similar trespass, on Sunday next after the Assumption of the Blessed Mary, place and year aforesaid, when they were accused of robbing her of a horse, a

EDWARD I. saddle, a robe of 'bleuetto,' value 40s.; but she deserted the appeal — before the justices, when solemnly called, wherefore that appeal is 1278-79. dismissed, and she and her pledges in amercement. In the present Jan. 20. case, the Court decides that Roger and the others except Walter, are convicted as without defence and are sent to gaol. And Dyonisia recovers damages taxed at []. The aforesaid Walter being asked for his defence, put himself on the country.

A jury from both sides of Coket, find that when Dyonisia was returning from Newcastle where she had been in a plea before Master Roger de Seton, the aforesaid parties met her and her uncle Master John Pampisham on Mildeburne moss, and vi et armis abducted her at Illesale, in the liberty of Redesdale, and carried her to Gedeworthe to compel her to marry Richard, till she was rescued by her friends. That after her abduction her said uncle went to Walter de Swethoppe and told him what had happened, asking amends. And he disavowed the trespass and said he would see amends made, if shewn how. Wherefore the jury acquit him of instigation or counsel. As to his attaching her at Hyrbotil, and the loss of the 10*l.*, they find that she was rescued at Gedeworthe in Scotland, and being under the K. of Scotland's peace, appealed the above Roger and others in his court, by judgment of which they were acquitted. But Walter for attaching her and taking the 10*l.* is committed to gaol, and she recovers damages taxed at [].

[Here the record ends, but in the duplicate roll of John de Metyng- ham, it appears that the defendants made a fine of 20 marks for the plaintiff's damages, and for the trespass 100s.]

[m. 16.] §. Concerning ladies:—They say that [among others] Agnes de Vescy, the two daughters of Thomas de Pontechope, and Margaret widow of Robert de Ros, are in the K.'s gift, and not yet married; except one of the heirs of Thomas de Pontechope, whom Eustace de Gurlay married without leave of Roger de Coyners, her guardian on the K.'s behalf. Alicnora de Balliol is marriageable, and her lands are worth 100 marks yearly. And Isabella de Merley is married, by what warrant is unknown. The sheriff ordered to present her; her land is worth 100*l.* yearly.

§ Purprestures. Three carucates of land in England were occupied in the time of William, King of Scotland, grandfather of Alexander now King, near Carham, by Bernard de Haudene and Aymer his son, which should belong to the Prior of Kirkeham by grant of Walter le Schek [Espece?], Robert de Ros's ancestor. It is worth 20s. yearly. The K. can claim nothing there but superiority. They say that half of same was occupied by Bernard and Aymer from the coronation of K. Henry, the K.'s father.

§ Defaults:—William de Soules [among others] absent primo die, in amercement.

§ Of fees:—Gilbert de Umfraville holds the barony of Prodou

EDWARD I. of the K. in capite by service of $9\frac{1}{4}$ knights' fees. Robert de ——— Somerville holds the barony of Merley of the K. in capite by service 1278-79. of 4 knights' fees.

Jan. 20. ¶ Regarding rights claimed. They say that Gilbert de Umfraville [m. 16, claims to have return of writs, and holds pleas de namio vetito, and dorso.] has gallows, and assize of bread and beer, and other pertinents of the Crown, but cannot give life and limb; by what warrant or from what time they know not. That the King of Scotland holds North Tindale as a liberty of the K., and his writ runs there, and he has gallows and assize of bread and beer, and holds pleas de namio vetito, and has all things pertaining to the Crown; by what warrant or from what time, they know not.

Gilbert de Umfraville earl of Angus, indicted elsewhere before Geoffry de Agylum and Philip de Wileby on these charges—(1) setting up warren at Babingetone without warrant; (2) attracting to his liberty of Redesdale pleas of the Crown from Coket moor; (3) resetting in his said liberty one John son of William, an outlaw in Hexham liberty; also a notorious robber, one Walter Denyas, with his fellows, in his castle of Prudhoe and at Hyrbotel, and giving him letters of conduct and protection, and appointing one Alexander of Kersterne his conductor, afterwards beheaded in Walter's company, and receiving 40*l.* from said Walter for said reset and safe conduct;
 (4) and of sending one Simon Smert and one Benedict Gley to Simondistede outside of his own liberty, to behead one Thomas of Hilon, an approver who had escaped from his prison, and whose head was brought back to Hyrdebotal, and there hung on the earl's gallows, to the prejudice of the K.'s dignity; (5) and delivering his own gaol without return of the K.'s writ; (6) and setting up a new sheriff's turn within his liberty of Redesdale, contrary to old custom;
 (7) and of taking one Hugh of Raperslawe, the K.'s bailiff, and imprisoning him, by Stephen Pykard, his knight, because he had entered his said liberty to give Bernard de Brus seisin of some land under the K.'s writ; (8) and for having given life and limb to a woman convicted of larceny, and to one William of Inhou a robber; (9) and for having de novo taken 'Thourtol' within his liberty from the K.'s men;
 (10) and for taking redemption of larceny, viz., from one Simon of Crokesdale, 40 marks—and 12 marks from one Ranulph, the nephew of the vicar of Alnetone, and Roger vicar of same vill, who were taken in his liberty on suspicion of larceny; who placed themselves on the country, but were released by him before the verdict of the jury.

Gilbert appears and denies all charges. (1) As to the warren—Roger Bertram acquired it from the K., then granted the manor to William de Swineburne from whom he [Gilbert] acquired it; (3) as to reset of John son of William, outlawed, he knows no such person in his liberty nor retains any felon there; (4) as to the beheading of Thomas of Holin, he says he was neither followed nor beheaded by

EDWARD I. him or his men ; (5) as to the gaol delivery, he says that all his ancestors had such right without the K.'s writ, as the liberty is near the 1278-79. Scottish march.; (6) he set up no 'turn' within his liberty; if there Jan. 20. was any such, he renounces it for himself and his heirs in perpetuum; (7) he never imprisoned Hugh of Raperislawe; (8) nor gave life and limb to any felon; (9) as to toll—all his ancestors from time immemorial have taken such at their markets of Hirdbotel and Illesdone, and so does he, and nowhere else, saving that he takes 'transversum' from Scots men at Illeshawe, but not from English men; (10) as to Simon of Krokedale, he was acquitted by a jury and died at the K.'s peace; as to Roben of Stanhus, he was indicted and arrested in his liberty for simple larceny, and he let him go on pledges till his gaol delivery; and as he escaped, he took 12 marks from his pledges; as to Ranulph the vicar of Alnetone's nephew, he trespassed in his forest and was attached at his court, and not appearing, his bailiffs took money from his pledges. And as he is not culpable of the trespasses charged, he places himself on the country, saving to himself benefit from the time of K. H[enry], when these things were done.

A jury from both sides of Coket, both of those who were jurors before the aforesaid G[eo]ffry and P[hilip], and of those now chosen for the Crown, say on oath that the Earl is not guilty, and therefore he is acquitted.

[m. 17.] The burgh of Newcastle-on-Tyne came by 12 [jurors].

David of Norberwick, John of Lambatres, Thomas his brother, withdrew themselves for the burglary of Thomas Abeloc's house. Of bad repute. Exigent and outlawry. No chattels. Andrew Clere of Scotland, and Nicholas his companion, slew Roger of Goseford in the Pilgrim's Street, in the burgh, and fled. Of evil repute. Exigent and outlawry. No chattels. The burgh in amercement for not taking them.

[m. 17, Beatrix of Quitefeld appeals in the county Thomas of dorso.] Wytewel of Newcastle, for sending Alan Leuedyman, John of Aberutstonn, Brun Aleyn, Roger the parson of Quytelfeld, Richard Faceben, and Peter the groom of Roger, to rob her house at Quytelfeld, of goods to the value of 100 marks. She comes and withdraws. Therefore is sent to gaol, and her pledges, Robert of Midford and Haulin of Newcastle, in amercement. Thomas is acquitted. The jurors attest that the trespass alleged was done in Tyndale in the kingdom of Scotland out of the kingdom of England, and the truth cannot be inquired into here. 149. Pleas of juries and assizes held before John de Vaux [and four others], justices itinerant at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the octaves of Hilary, 7th of K. Edward.

1278-1279 Alexander de Bonkyll, Robert of Botland, Richard Ker, Gilbert of Jan. 20. Liddesdale [and eight others], were attached to answer to John de

EDWARD I. Herthwaytone, in a plea, why they, with Cristiana wife of said Alexander, Thomas son of Adam of Lilleburne, and Philip le Ken, when 1278-79. the said John had taken Alexander's avers trespassing at Fenewicke, [m. 1, and wished to 'impark' them according to law, vi et armis rescued dorso.] them and beat and injured John's men in charge, to his damage of 20*l*. John had found the beasts feeding in his meadow not yet mowed on All Saints' day. Alexander and Robert of Botlande are acquitted as not present.

Richard Ker and the rest say that the custom of the country is after the ninth hour of day on All Saints' day, it is an open time, and lawful for anyone to feed his avers in unfenced meadows, and they came after that hour and fed the avers along with those of John then in the meadow. John says they came before the said hour.

The jury find that the said Richard and others, except one, forcibly rescued the avers, and beat and evil-entreated one John Horn, and one Wytyng Godessun, John's men, and also that the meadow is his separable pasture, and not common. They confine Richard and the others, and assess his damages at 2*s*. The defendants afterwards make a fine with him for 20*s*. by pledge of said Alexander.

John de Teket says after the death of Sir John Cumyn, father of these brothers, he as the K. of Scotland's bailiff and escheator in Tyndale, took the same with Sir John's other lands, in the K.'s hand, and afterwards delivered them under the K.'s writ to John Cumyn senior, his son and heir, who took, and is in, seisin. John Cumyn junior is a minor. Agreed between the brothers that John Cumyn senior gives the younger John 20*l.* of land in the manor of Thorutone in tenancy till the latter is 21 years of age. He also will pay him 200 marks at Thorntone, in four equal sums at Pentecost next, Martinmas thereafter, and at Pentecost and Martinmas of the succeeding year. Which 200 marks by consent of Sirs John Cumyn senior and Robert de Rosse, shall be kept by Sir James de Byrun for the younger brother's use, with the issues of the land, till his majority; when Sir James shall answer for both money and issues to Sirs John Cumyn senior and Robert de Rosse or their heirs, and on failure, may be distrained on his lands in England and Scotland. On the younger brother attaining majority, and discharging his elder brother of all claims on their father's lands, he shall be enfeoffed in the 20*l.* land in Thorntone, to be held by him and the heirs of his body for the quarter of a knight's fee. If he refuses, he shall forfeit his right, and the writings in neutral hands shall be delivered to the elder brother with the money aforesaid; saving only two charters given to John Cumyn junior by his father concerning Thorntone manor, which shall be delivered to himself. If the younger die in minority without heir of his body, Robert Cumyn his uterine brother, shall have the lands and money above provided on the same conditions in omnibus. If Robert die without heir of his body, the 20*l.* land shall revert to John Cumyn senior and his heirs. And the 200 marks shall go to Robert's next friends and executors. John Cumyn senior shall be bound also to pay Alicia, Robert's sister, if then unmarried, for her marriage, the value of the said 20*l.* of land, viz., for each markland 10 marks, on her discharging him of all claim on her brother Robert's lands. If Alicia is married at Robert's death the said John or his heirs shall not be bound to pay her any sum.

The Prior of Hexham answers to the K. of Scots in a plea why in disinherittance of that K. and injury of his liberty and regality of Tyndale, he impleaded Robert and Alan de Veteripont the K.'s men, before the K. of England's justices itinerant in Cumberland and Westmoreland, and still impleads them before that K.'s justices in York, for trespasses in Tyndale, as the K. of Scotland never refused the Prior a writ from his chancery according to English law; whereby Thomas de Fisburne the K.'s procurator asserts he is damaged to the extent of 1000*l*. The Prior admits the fact, but says when the K. of England's writ was obtained, the manor of Aldenestone where the trespass occurred was in the K. of England's hand, and thus he could have no remedy otherwise, and offers to prove this by the record and rolls of the latter's justices, at his own peril. Is granted a day for this on the morrow of Epiphany, when he appears and fails to produce his evidence, as the English justices had remitted the matter to the K. of England, who had signified his pleasure to the K. of Scots; wherefore the Prior averred it was unnecessary for him to produce any enrolment. The procurator of the K. of Scots asks judgment as the Prior has failed to testify the Court. [Some words lost.]

William also remits to the Abbot and his successors all his right in an annual rent of 13 bolls of meal and 4s. silver, and pasture for 2 mares and their followers of 2 years, in the Abbot's parks of Evelingham; the chirographs of old made between Nicholas late Abbot of Jedburgh, and William, remaining in full force. The Abbot quit claims to William and his heirs his right of common grazing for 40 mares and their 'sequela' of 2 years, in Belingeham, Wardlawe and Grenacres, saving their right of grazing in same vills for 40 cows and their 'sequela' of a year old, as in the charter of Alan son of Dolfin, William's grandfather, to the church of the Blessed Mary of Jedburgh and the canons.

Nov. (?) 227. [A churchman] to R[obert] bishop of Bath and Wells, the chancellor. The writer in high flown language asks the Bishop's attention not only to his own affairs, but also to those of his compatriot of good memory Sir W. de Lyndesye, who as the Bishop knows, died on 'that expedition.' Who often before starting thereon, urged the writer most humbly to undertake the executry. Which he did, chiefly for the K.'s service, and did all things duly, according to his power, and to an inventory. This inventory, however, being very poor, the K.'s escheator has inhibited all administration till he has the K.'s pleasure. As he [the deceased?] is bound to 'many poor,' the writer asks the Bishop to signify his pleasure to him and the executors, and likewise the K.'s favour. For, having the former he knows no other can grieve him. Regarding the matter on which the Bishop wrote to him by his monk, he will shortly shew it in earnest in a writ.  friar John of St Germans, which has afforded him great solace in these 'intolerable' difficulties and troubles which he has sustained and still feels through the death of his most beloved son, the K.'s dear nephew. Reminds him, that though death has carried off all of his blood in Scotland, one yet remains, the child of his own dearest daughter the K.'s niece, the late Queen of Norway, now under divine providence the heir apparent of Scotland. Much good may yet be in store for them, and death only can dissolve their league of amity.
 Begs credence for his messenger Andrew abbot of Cupar, and

May 18. 252. Alexander K. of Scots, to the K. Regarding John Mazun, who asserts that the writer is due him for wines, and in consequence of whose numerous 'interpellations' the K. has twice sent letters to the writer on his behalf, he now declares the truth as he has learned

EDWARD I. it from his lieges. When Weland clerk of his chamber, on behalf of ——— the Chamberlain, had appointed Tuesday after the F. of the B.
 1284. Luke Evangelist at Haddington for payment of divers merchants, May 18. John appeared with his claim. Weland told him to produce certain letters of agreement between him and the writer's Council, duly sealed, when he would pay him forthwith. John, however, declined to do so, whereon Weland asked advice from his companions and other merchants. They advised that unless John first accounted, and then on payment delivered up the letters, he neither could nor ought safely to pay him. So John withdrew only partially paid by his own fault. If the K. will enjoin him to come to Scotland, and account reasonably with the writer's men, as he has elsewhere desired him, he will get his due without delay, the rather that Edward has written on his behalf. Dundee, 18th May, 35th of his reign. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. $\frac{41}{3}$.]

 26th June, 35th of his reign. [Royal Letters, No. 1964.]

Beginning 254. Isabel de Baillol to Sir Robert Burnel bishop of Bath, of Aug. respecting the debts of her lord, who was alleged to be due the K.
 300 marks, for which the Sheriff of Northumberland had been [commanded] under the green wax to make a levy on their lands and chattels. Beseches the Bishop's interference, and for the K.'s letters to the sheriff to leave them and their people in peace till Parliament, that they may know what the debt is, by searching the K.'s rolls;
 which they cannot learn from the sheriff or otherwise. Tells him she has written to 'Ma Dame la Regne' begging her to aid that their debts be 'estales' to Parliament, and asks him likewise to help.
 Adds that they cannot have respite from the sheriff if the debt is not paid at Easter, unless by favour of court, and hastily by the bearer. (Addressed) 'Al Eveske de Ba.' [No place or date.
 Slightly damaged.] [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. $\frac{41}{7}$.]

[Circa 1284.] 264. John son of the K.'s 'faithful servant,' Bernard le Masson' burgess of Bordeaux, to the K. Reminds him that he had very many times pointed out to him how the K. of Scotland was due him money which he could not procure; wherefore the K. had written three times to the Scottish K. asking him to pay. To which the latter had replied, desiring that the writer should come to him and he should be satisfied. How he was accordingly despatched with the K.'s letter, whereof he sends a transcript. But on arriving, the Scottish K. and his [people] injured him in many ways, too long to detail; nor could he get any money, as they cheated him of 200 marks and more, and nevertheless asked him to give them a letter of quittance in full. On his refusing, they put him in prison, where he still is, and will remain till the K. succours him. And they snatched from his hand the K.'s [of Scotland] obligatory letter. Wherefore he beseeches the K. most urgently for the service done by his late father to the K.'s father, to aid him, as he knows for truth, he will never recover his money or his liberty otherwise. Implores the K., for Jesus Christ's sake, to come to his assistance, as he has neither hope, nor aid, nor succour elsewhere. [No place or date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Whereon Alan Radric's men came with his sealed letter that the ship should go to a better port, and that he would take care of their goods as his own. When they went to Alan's port, he took all the goods out of the ship, leaving only two men in her. And 'at prim saon' the anchors, cables, and 'moodres' of the ship gave way, and she was cast ashore. 290. The grievances of Roger rector of Witfeld church in Durham.

Before He complains to God and the K. of England that Sir Symon
March 19. Fraser and his brother Andrew, sent 32 of their servants, who bound him, and having taken him with his feet tied under the belly of a sumpter horse into Scotland, robbed him of his goods, and at the end of eight days severely wounded him and left him for dead about midnight in the forest of Selkirk. Meanwhile, Beatrix de Witfeld and her son Robert cousins of said malefactors, forcibly entered his church of Witfeld, have hitherto kept possession of the same, and are wasting its fruits. Wherefore the Bishop of Durham excommunicated Beatrix and Robert by name. Under which they have obstinately remained for fourteen years and more. And as the said church is in Tindale within the K. of Scotland's liberty, and these malefactors are cousins of William Fraser, his Chancellor, the rector can get no justice of them. Nor does that King wish them justified by the secular arm, though the K. of England has sent him letters and mandates. These things are public and notorious among the clergy and people through the whole diocese of Durham.

(Endorsed) J. de Kirkeham and the Bishop of Durham on the fact.

And let there be a writ to the K. of Scotland, as said J. shall arrange. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 11.]

Soon after 291. The Prior and convent of Kyrkeham to the K. They pray
March 19. that in regard to the lands lately recovered by them by award of Parliament, pertaining to their manor of Karham on the March of England and Scotland, he would grant them such right as in the following 'pleynt' to the late K. of Scotland:—

The K. to the K. of Scotland. The Prior and convent of EDWARD I. Kirkeham claim certain lands and pastures within the precinct of their manor of Karham, against Sir Ralf de Houedene, of Scotland, who has seized them, and, notwithstanding that they possess under solemn inquisitions made by the K. with advice of his Court, wickedly suggests that they are within Scotland, and harasses the petitioners, capturing their cattle and men. Requests Alexander to put a stop to this and make amends, giving them seisin of the lands and pastures in dispute; also if he thinks himself aggrieved, to send messengers to him fully instructed. And that if this is not done the K. will apply a remedy by advice of his Council. Westminster, 30th May, 13th of his reign.

That after this the K. of Scotland, as requested, had sent his messengers to Ledes. And the K. granted to the parties an inquisition by persons of both realms. And Sir Thomas de Normanville, Sir William de Burneton, and Sir Gilbert de Thornton were sent to the March to hold the same; but it was delayed by the K. of Scotland's death, and nothing done. Wherefore they now pray the K. to cause the matter to take effect, that they and their church be not spoiled.

(Endorsed) Northumberland. Petition of the Prior and Convent of Kyrkeham. Coram Rege. The K. can do nothing at present and wishes letters of Council. Coram Consilio. Let him declare who can consent to the inquisition for the K. of Scotland. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459].

Not in Palgrave. Chester :—Chronicles delivered by R. Archdeacon of Chester.

[The first, a narrow membrane, contains extracts almost identical with the history of Henry of Huntingdon, from the expedition of Edred younger son of Athelstane to Northumbria and Scotland, when the latter ‘were subdued without a battle by the terror of his arms, and did fealty,’ down to the reign of Stephen, when David K. of Scotland swore fealty to the Empress Matilda, and ‘Henry K. of Scotland son of K. David’ became Stephen’s man and received from him the burgh of Huntingdon.

The second membrane, in a different hand, begins with the

EDWARD I. Conqueror's expedition to Scotland, and Malcolm's submission at ——— Abernethy—his meeting with William Rufus at Gloucester in 1291. August 1093, when he departed declining to do 'right' to William April 21—except on the confines of their kingdoms where the Kings of Scotland
 May 20. were accustomed to do so, according to the judgment of the Primates of both kingdoms—his death with his eldest son Edward at Alnwick, and the death of Queen Margaret within 'three days after,' when having 'called the priests, she entered the church, confessed her sins,
 'received the viaticum,' and 'freed from earthly fetters, passed to the 'joys of eternal salvation. In life a devout worshipper of charity, 'justice, peace and piety—frequent in prayer, she macerated her body
 'with vigils and fasts, endowed churches and monasteries—loved and 'honoured the servants and hand-maids of God, broke bread for the 'hungry, clothed the naked, gave lodging, food, and clothing to all
 'strangers, and loved God with her whole heart.' The extracts end with the marriage of Henry I. and Matilda.

The third membrane, much mutilated and defaced, is in a hand similar to the first, and appears to consist of notes of the returns from the different houses for the use of the Commissioners or those who drew up the Great Roll.] [Chapter House (Scots Documents), Box

 Henry III. at York in 1237, in presence of the Cardinal Legate Otto, and the letter by Alexander and his nobles to Pope Innocent [IV.], subjecting themselves to papal censure by the hands of any suffragan

 A.D. 1244.]

[Extracts.]

1069:—Cumbria now consists of the bishoprics of Carlisle, Glasgow, and Whitherne, and moreover, from the bishopric of Carlisle as far as the river Dundee, &c. [Doon?].

1138:—K. David wasted and occupied almost all Northumbria, and seized Cumbria, Carlisle, New Castle, and other towns excepting Bamburgh, when Stephen compelled him to return to his own land, and followed him to Roxburgh. But in summer David again crossed the Tees, when the English met him at Cuton more, and fought the battle called ‘Standard,’ with great slaughter of the Scots and many prisoners.

1152:—Henry the Earl, his son, died at Carlisle on the ides of June.

1153:—K. David, beyond all his ancestors the most noble founder of monasteries, died at Carlisle, 9th of the ides of June. While his body was borne to Dunfermline, the Scottish sea smoothed its waves, but when it left the beach they began to swell again.

1158:—Henry II. led his army to Toulouse. On his return he knighted Malcolm K. of Scotland at Tours (Turonis). This Henry took Carlisle from Malcolm.

1174:—William K. of Scotland besieged Carlisle, but was manfully repulsed by the citizens. Soon after, he was taken prisoner at Alnwick on the ides of July, verifying as it seemed, the prophecy of Merlin, ‘that a curb forged in the heart of Brittany shall be put in his jaws,’ meaning by this, Richmond Castle, held by the Armorican princes, where he was imprisoned.

1201:—The Scottish magnates swore fealty to Alexander, son of K. William. John, Cardinal legate from Pope Innocent [III.] held a Council at Perth in Scotland.

1216:—John K. of England died while war was rising all around. Alexander, K. of Scots, besieged Carlisle, and the citizens delivered it to him as John had done them much harm. Shortly after he gained the town and citadel by force. [The extracts close with the marriage of Alexander II. to Johanna of England about midsummer 1221, and the two documents by him and his nobles regarding peace above noticed. Matilda wife of David I. is called niece of William the Conqueror, daughter of Ivetta (Judith) who was daughter of Earl Lambert of Louns. David I. is said to have built the 'very strong' citadel of Carlisle, and greatly heightened the city walls. The birth of Alexander II. on St Bartholomew's day 1198, is mentioned, and the homage done to him by all the Scottish magnates at Musclevurgh in his 4th year. [On the margin are notes relating for the most part to English history.] Their common seal is appended. [Chapter House (Scots Documents), Box 100, No. 170.]

Written in a large text hand, the capitals illuminated and paragraphs rubricated; the marginal notes in blue and red ink. The latter colour has run and is now illegible. Document otherwise defaced. Seal lost. Palgrave considers it chiefly taken from the Chronicle of Mailros.

Croyland Abbey:—Their return begins with a list [much mutilated] of the holders of castles in a lost year of Henry II. That King is stated as holding those of Stirling, Edinburgh, Berwick, and Roxburgh; also the castles of Anant and . . . which were Robert de Brus's. Richard de Moreville held the Castle of Lauder. A narrative follows of the invasion of Northumberland by William the Lyon, with details of the horrible atrocities committed by his army on non-combatants—the names of his barons captured with him before Alnwick, Richard Cumin, William de Mortemer, William de Insula, Henry Revel, Ralph de Ver, Jordan Fleming, Waldeve son of Baldwin de Biggar, Richard Maluvell—the rebellion of Huctred and Gilbert sons of Fergus of Galloway, their expulsion of William's officers, slaughter of all English and French whom they could capture, and destruction of his castles in their land. The extracts close with the homage and fealty by William, his clergy and barons to Henry at York on 10th August, 1175, ratifying his previous

This instrument differs in several points from the Great Roll. The names of the Competitors and their order vary, and the narrative is much more succinct. Nothing is said of the absence of John de Balliol on the first day. The chief feature is the recording of the Competitors' submission. There is also a curious miscalculation in the day of the month. The day on which the submission of the Competitors was executed, is said in that document to have been Tuesday next after the Ascension, which, according to the calculations in Sir Harris Nicolas and Mr Bond's works, was Tuesday the 5th of June, Ascension Day this year falling on Thursday 31st May. In the foregoing instrument, the notary gives the days as Monday and Tuesday the 2nd and 3rd of June.

 security to restore them within two months thereafter; and that the interim revenues of the realm should be preserved, saving the reasonable expenses of government. Done at Norham day aforesaid, and William bishop of Ely; Master Henry de Newerk dean of York,

1292. William le Waleys who had a writ of novel disseisin against Adam son of Alan of Ulvesby and John son of Adam le Waleys as to a tenement in Ulvesby, asked leave and was allowed to withdraw. Amerced. No pledges as it was by oath. [m. 1.]

Henry son of William le Carpenter and Mariota his wife claim versus Thomas de Currewenne, a messuage and 18 acres of land in Wyndscles. Thomas says his name is Thomas de Culewen, not de Currewenne, and asks judgment. The plaintiffs are nonsuited and amerced for a false claim. [m. 12.]

Master Adam of Kyrkecudbright parson of Edenhale church, summoned by John of Grantham for 37*l.* 5*s.* 11*d.*, appears by attorney and agrees to pay by instalments of 19*l.* at St. Hilary next, and the balance at Midsummer following. John pays half a mark for leave to agree. [m. 24.]

Geoffry de Moubray complains that Robert de Brus senior and Cristiana his wife, who hold 4 carucates and 600 acres of wood in Boulton and Bastingthwait as her dower in the plaintiff's heritage, have cut down 1000 oaks, value of each 4*d.*, and made and carried off marl from a rood of land in excess of her dower, and to his damage of 300*l.* The defendants say they have taken nothing but reasonable estovers for 'burning, building, and enclosing,' as entitled. The sheriff in person and a jury of 12 to hold an inquiry in the ground, and certify the justices at Newcastle-on-Tyne on the morrow of Hilary next.

Robert de Brus senior and Cristiana his wife complain that Geoffry de Moubray refuses to keep an agreement entered into between Adam de Gesemuthe her former husband, herself, and Robert de Moubray, Geoffry's uncle, whose heir he is, on the morrow of the Virgin's Nativity [9th Sept.] 1261,—whereby Roger was to assign to Adam and Cristiana in dower the third of a vaccary and other tenements in Bolton,—to their damage of 20*l.*, and produce the writing. Geoffry by attorney pleads that as their writ is for damages, they cannot recover the freehold under it. Afterwards at Newcastle-on-Tyne, in the 5th week after Easter [29th Mar. 1293], the plaintiffs are nonsuited and amerced for a false claim. [m. 25.]

Nov. 3. Richard de Kyrkebride, with William Lokarde, Walter de Twynham, Gilbert de Suthayk, Nicholas de Auchenleck (Haghenlek) and Matillidis his wife, Patrick son of Patrick Trumpe, and Walter son of Walter de Corry, sues Robert de Brus senior and Christiana his wife for the sixth part of the half of the manor of Glassanby, which belonged to Helewysse de Aykton the plaintiff's cousin, who died without an heir of her body, wherefore the right 'resorted' to Euphemia, Margery, Isabella, Eva, Juliana, and Agnes, sisters of one Ralph, Helewysa's father, as her aunts and heirs; from Euphemia the eldest of whom the right came by three descents to Richard.

EDWARD I. The other plaintiffs do not sue for their five parts. [The defendants
 --- appear but the case breaks off.] [m. 25, d.]

1292. Henry Engayne claims versus Robert de Brus and Christiana his

Nov. 3. wife, the manor of Glassanby, except 6 bovates of land and 13s. 4d. of rent, wherein Gilbert his ancestor was seised in the time of King John the King's grandfather—after him William his son and heir, who dying childless the right descended to Robert his brother. From him to Gilbert as his son and heir; and from Gilbert to another Gilbert as his son and heir; and from him to his son and heir the plaintiff. Robert and Christiana say that K. John by charter gave the vills of Gamelsby and Glassanby to Odard de Hodalmia (who was the grandfather of Christiana his heiress), for his homage and service, and paying 2 marks yearly for cornage, and produce the charter. Henry rejoins that K. John had nothing in the manor of Glassanby but a ward, wherefore they cannot disguise the business by the K.'s charter. The charter being viewed in court, which attests the gift, Henry is told he must sue the King if he sees fit. [m. 26.]

John de Kyrkpatrik and Margery his wife ordered to shew what right they have in a messuage, 71 acres of land, 20 acres meadow and 40 acres of wood in Torpennou, which they hold for Margery's life, of the heritage of Richard le Brun and his heirs. As John dwells in Scotland and has no land here but 20s., which he has demised to Geoffry de Tylyol, the same ordered to be distrained in the latter's hands. [m. 39.]

John de Seton, summoned to shew quo warranto he claimed free warren in Lambynby, replied that Henry III. by charter in his 51st year granted free warren to one Robert de Hauton and his heirs, and produces the deed. William Inge for the K. says that John not being heir of Robert in the line of consanguinity can make no claim and shews no special fact. At Newcastle, on the fifth week of Easter, John has judgment given against him, and is fined half a mark. [m. 76, d.]

The attestation by Andrew son of the late William de Tang, clerk of the diocese of York and apostolic notary, certifies, that he was present during the execution of the several instruments of homage and fealty, duly executed by the various persons and communities named, to which their several seals are appended, and has recorded them 'de verbo in verbum' with his own hand on these thirty-five pieces of parchment sewn together, and after collating them carefully with Sir Robert de Osbaldewyk chaplain, and Thomas de Welleburne clerk, has made certain specified corrections, and verified the whole both at the 'sutures' and at the end by his accustomed notarial sign. [m. 35.] [*Tower Mis-

EDWARD I.

1296.

Written in a large text hand and in very fine condition, with the exception of the first two membranes, which are frayed and defaced at one side. Each homage begins with an elegant capital letter. There are two other copies; one, No. 88, is understood to be that from which Prynne made his extracts; the other, No. 90, originally consisting of 41 membranes, according to the notarial certificate (though one has been since lost), has been the most ornamented, and possibly the principal. It has been, however, more damaged than the other two. All are in the same handwriting.

1298. 990. Instrument attesting that on Friday, 8th of the ides of June June 6–15. 1298, at Provins in the diocese of Sens, Masters John Lovel and John de Selveston special envoys of the K. of England, in the presence and by command of Philip K. of France, delivered their credentials under the Great seal of England, to Master Robert de Pontisera canon of Chartres. [These recited at length, dated St Edmund, 10th May previous.] After a short deliberation, the K. of France, having graciously accorded audience, the said Master John Lovel, standing, after preliminary remarks on behalf of his master, proffered and read to the K. of France and his Council the following 'cedula':—[which is in Norman French and recited at great length]. The K. agrees to the truce proposed by the K. of France for himself and

EDWARD I. his allies, and the condition as to exchange of prisoners. He refuses to ——— include John de Balliol whom the French envoys call ‘K. of Scots,’ or 1298. his people, in the truce, because before the first truce and ever since, the June 6–15. land of Scotland was and is in his property and possession, and he is seised of the homages and fealties of the prelates, earls, barons, knights, and other nobles, and the entire communities and inhabitants of said land; nor were they named, as the other allies of France were, in the proposals for a truce. If Sir John de Balliol casually made an alliance with the K. of France, which is not admitted, he had no power to do so, as he was in homage to the K. of England. Therefore, as kings and princes should above all others keep faith, loyalty, and truth, the K. begs that no aid be given to the Scots. And especially, as some Scottish knights and others his liegemen and of his household, who before and after the time of truce were in his service with banners displayed, against the K. of France, and have since deserted him, he requests that no help or countenance be given them, under the threat that negotiations will be broken off. To shew the strength of his case, four public instruments are here recited at length (in Latin):—(1)
 The homage of John de Balliol K. of Scotland, dated Newcastle, 26th Dec. 1292 [No. 653]. (2) The fealty of the same, dated at the castle of Norham, 20th November 1292 [No. 650]. (3) Here is recited the instrument [No. 821] containing the resignation by John de Balliol of his kingdom and renunciation by him and the clergy, nobles, and communities of Scotland of their league with Philip. (4) Instrument under the seals of Robert archbishop of Canterbury, Anthony bishop of Durham, Richard bishop of London, and Walter bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, attesting the deeds of homage and fealty to the K. by the aforesaid bishops, abbots, priors, earls, barons, and others of the kingdom of Scotland [recited at length]. In addition the homage and fealty of the burgesses and community of St Andrews is given, St Andrews, 29th August 1296. Also the ‘letters of certain ‘inhabitants of Scotland’ as follows:—‘Gillenef M^cGillherf, Neel
 ‘M^cEthe, Gillecryst M^cEthe, Dungal M^cGilleueras, Duncan M^cGillau-‘cuan, Adam M^cGilleconil, Gillespie M^cEuri, Cuthbert M^cEuri, ‘Kalman M^cKelli, Michael his brother, Hoen M^cEthe, Cuthbert
 ‘his brother, Achmacath M^cGilmotha, Michael M^cGilmocha, the chief ‘men (greinours) of the lineage of Clenafren, declare that having ‘aided John de Balliol late K. of Scotland, in his war and “fole “enprise” against the K. of England, who is about to send his army
 ‘into Galloway to chastise them, they for themselves and their lineage ‘confess their fault, come to his peace, and swear on the Saints to ‘assist him against Balliol and all others; and have given hostages.
 ‘Done at Wigeton, Monday next after St John Baptist’s day, 1296.’ Which various instruments so read by Master John, and by him and his fellow envoy delivered to the K. of France by the hands of Master Robert, the latter in his master’s name declared that the K

EDWARD I. of France would observe the truce in all points. The latter afterwards assigned Sunday eight days after the Sunday following, viz., 15th June, at Chateau Thierry (Castrum Terricum), for the English envoys' hearing his deliverance or response to their propositions; and they having requested restitution of their original letters, Master Robert informed them, these should be delivered on the day of conference. On said day, viz., 17th of the kalends of July, the English envoys arriving at Chateau Thierry as appointed, and finding the K. of France not there, but at the monastery of Consiac in the diocese of Soissons, at three leagues' distance, followed him there; when in presence of his Council, he announced to them by Master Robert, that he would observe the truce in all points. But touching the question of the Scots, he would send his own envoys with his response. In reply to the English envoys' requests for restoration of their letters and delivery of prisoners, the K. replied that the former was granted, and as to the latter, he should reply by his own envoys. Done at Consiac before Sir Charles count of Aujou brother of the K. of France [and others].

[Two attestations follow—one by James called Grassus of Vercelli public apostolic and imperial notary, the other by John called Bhowss of London papal notary—the latter being the writer of the entire instrument on eleven rolls.] [Chapter House (Scots Documents) Box 17, No. 8.]

[1300 ?] 1167. Thomas Wale to the K. Reports his reaching Anagnia where October. the papal court was, on Sunday next after St Peter's day, when he

EDWARD I. presented the K.'s letters to the Pope without delay, as commanded. — Next day the Pope sent for him, and said he had read with much [1300 ?] pleasure the K.'s courteous and plain statement of his right to Scotland, 'which had done his heart good.' The writer replied that the K. so trusted in his Holiness's justice that he wished him to know his right in all points. The Pope then made friar William de Geyneseboreghe again rehearse the matter before him; and said the K. did well to trust to him, as now he could save the lordship of Scotland to the English Crown. He farther told him openly before many that the K. was the crowned head he loved most ('qe vous fustes le homme dumond qe portast coroune qil plus ama'); and if the letters told truth as he believed, no man could oust the K. from the Seignory of Scotland. As some thought there was in the papal registers information important to the K., he got friar William de Geyneseboreghe, who is more 'prive' about the court than himself, to procure him a sight of these, and has found in three places valuable matter. So soon as he had it in writing he had it sealed; and then showed the Cardinals what he had found, who all said it was enough, as to-morrow would witness. He will send transcripts to the K., but retains the sealed letter, which he dare not trust to a soul for fear of loss. The Pope had remarked his long stay, and he replied he was at his pleasure. The Pope said the K.'s affairs could not be furthered till he had laid them before a Consistory—that the writer had seen how he often could not attend to business for weakness, and recommended him to return home, leaving friar William de Geyneseboreghe to represent the K. Norman French.

- [1301.] 1223. The writer [the constable of Berwick?], informs the K. that Sept. 14. as the 200l. ordered before his departure, did not reach him till 28th August, a mutiny arose on the 30th among the foot crossbowmen and archers in the garrison, joined by some of the men-at-arms of Sir Rauf le fiz Michiel who was with them in Gascony, and is their leader and 'mestre abettour' in all riots. Though they swore if any man-at-arms approached the 'palys,' they would kill his horse and cut off his head, he armed and mounted his people and rode up the great street, which they were blocking to prevent the guard being mounted. When they saw him, they let him pass, but molested his people vilely on returning. He placed two men-at-arms at each post, and consulted Sir Walter de Teye, who said he could not blame the mutineers, for when the Earls of England were in the town, they had only got 3 days' pay, and were now a month in arrear. So the writer and his people remained on guard at the 'palis' all night, and before sunrise Sir John de Seytone came with 4 'vallettes' to his aid. That morning he caused Sir Walter to proclaim that all the men-at-arms and others should meet them at St Nicholas's church. And there, in presence of Sir Peres de Maulee, Sir Robert his brother, and Sir Walter, he asked each gentleman by name, knight or esquire, if he would mount guard. All replied that they would willingly, and that they had no concern in the mutiny of the foot, which they disavowed. Whereon the latter took counsel and agreed to mount guard till Friday thereafter, and if they got no money, then they would leave the town. That day the 200l. arrived, and on Thursday morning he counted it before the sheriff of Northumber-

EDWARD I. land, who brought it, and paid their share to the garrisons of Roxburgh and Jedeworth. On Friday he mustered his garrison and paid them, when Sir Walter commanded him to pay the whole sum to the garrison of Berwick and none other, in terms of his own letter from the K. saying 'We send you 200*l.* for your garrison;' and as the Roxburgh and Jedeworth men were not in Berwick, they should not have a penny of what was sent for him and his men. The writer replied that the K. always treated Roxburgh, Jedeworth, and Berwick as one, and shewed his letters of this year Sir Walter replied that the K. had done ill in sending him such express letters, he being only a lay man, and begs the K. to send him nothing unless it distinctly shews what he is to do. The writer has suffered evil and annoyance through want of this, for in place of Sir Walter getting only 14*l.* 14*s.*, he has taken 36*l.* from him, whereby he has nothing to pay his own people. He has written about this to the Bishop, and has received a reply this Tuesday, a transcript of which he encloses. As to William de la Chambre's white pied horse, valued at 10 marks, he knows not whether it was lost in the K.'s service, or given, or sold. Written at Berwick, 14th September. Norman French. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 160.]

Sept. 21. 1224. Henry earl of Lincoln to the K. Understanding that so soon as he has taken Bothwell castle, the K. will attempt that of Innerkyp, he has sent a vessel there with victuals for the garrison when he takes it. Begs the K. if he has taken the castle before the writer's people arrive to garrison it, to entrust the victuals to safe custody. Written in Galloway near Loghmaban, the 21st day of September. Norman French. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Circa 1225. William de Dorem his bachelor, to the K. Informs him that this Monday next after the Feast of St Matthew, a spy came to him at Peblys from Nithsdale, and told him for certain that the Scots who were in Galloway had retreated towards Nithsdale, and this Sunday last past were at 'les Kellys,' and would be on Monday after at Glencarn, but whither from thence they would 'draw,' he did not certify him. Whereon he sent the news at once to all the K.'s garrisons, that they should be careful of the K.'s ordinances and honour as lately commanded, by God's aid. He ought to have his money from one day to another, and will inform the K. of what news he hears. His spy told him that these Scots heard that 'my lord your son' was on pilgrimage to St Ninian (Rineyan), and they removed the image [of the saint(?)] to New Abbey, and on the next morning they hoped to find it, and it had gone back to St Ninian! Norman French. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

Sept. 23. 1226. [Sir Hugh de Audeley?] to the K. It had been arranged

EDWARD I. between himself, the sheriff of Roxburgh and Sir Richard his brother, ——— and Sir Alexander de Balliol, that they should attack at three points [1301.] the moor of Alkirk, in which some robbers infesting the county of Roxburgh had taken refuge. While he and his foresters were on their march, he found them in a house, whence they fled for a wood, but he took them all, dead or alive. Returning to the house of the resetter, he took the goods and avers there and drove them off. The sheriff of Roxburgh met him mid-way and demanded them. As he wished to avoid strife he gave up the beasts, but kept the prisoners till he knew the K.'s will. The foresters pray the K. for the goods of the resetter, as others have what they can gain on the enemy. Recommends the K. to grant this, as they have aided him loyally and will be encouraged to do so again. Written at Melros, 23rd September. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 47.]

Trace of small seal, red wax, on back.

Circa 1227. Robert Hastang' to the K. Under an agreement between Sept. 23. Sir Hugh de Audeleye, himself, and his brother, for pursuing robbers and malefactors in the county of Roxburgh, they attacked a wood which was one of their greatest retreats in the country, and while Sir Hugh and his foresters were coming to meet himself and his brother, the former came on 12 most notorious thieves who had been indicted before the writer, took them all, dead or alive, except one who escaped, and carried the survivors and the stolen cattle they had, out of the county to his own bailliary. When challenged by the writer to deliver the thieves to Roxburgh castle and the cattle as the K.'s escheat, he gave up a part of the 'bestial' and carried the thieves and the rest of it, either to the prison of Berwick or Baumburgh, he does not know which. Asks the K. whether Sir Hugh or himself is to have them, as the former claims them and their ransom as prisoners of war, under the K.'s grant of what he can gain upon the enemy; whereas they are common and notorious thieves, and have made such riot in the county that the people told him they expected him to clear them out. Their names are Henry del Hepe, Thomas le filz Margarete, and one John del Hepe, and others. Begs the K. to write to Sir Hugh to return them to Roxburgh prison, or he will find no man in the county willing to obey him after his authority has been defied. Norman French. [No date.] [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 41.]

Sept. 25. 1228. To the K. The [anonymous] writer informs him that since he last wrote, there had come from the Exchequer to Berwick soon after Holy Rood [day] 1000 marks or 1000*l.*, besides the 1000 marks sent before. Understanding that the Prince greatly needed money, he has sent 500 marks to Carlisle, making up 2000 marks with the 1000*l.* sent before. And he sends to Berwick 1000 marks for the K. So that besides what came since, the Bishop of Chester has sent in all 2000 marks to Berwick; and to Carlisle for his son other 2000

EDWARD I. marks, now there on St Matthew's day [21st September]. Has good ——— hope that by Michaelmas there will be enough to pay both the K.'s [1301.] army and his son's, if not otherwise disposed of by the K., and if as much as possible of the 'profre' is taken beforehand. Begs him to send this last as soon as possible, for without money it will be difficult to help the garrisons of Berwick or Lochmaben. This Monday before Michaelmas there is no news at York either from the Bishop of Chester or the Earl of Lincoln, but such are expected soon, men say. Written at York, the 25th September. Norman

Sept. 29. [This force, under the K. in person, consisted of about 6800 men, entirely on foot, except their officers, and a few light horsemen or 'hobelars.' They were all archers, except 20 crossbowmen, 20 masons and 20 miners; to each of which two last companies a 'logeman' or executioner was attached. A body of 20 men was attached to the K.'s person. The counties contributed the following proportions :
 —Hereford, 350 men; Worcester, 340; Shropshire, 546; Stafford, 346; Derby, 234; Nottingham, 250; Gloucester, 225; counties not named, 507; York, 1193; Northumberland, 2019; from the liberty of the Abbot of Byland, 15; from garrison of Berwick, 110;

 'hobelars foresters'; from Redesdale, 200 archers of the Earl of Angus; 264 archers from Tynedale, the Bishop of Durham's; from the garrison of Edinburgh, 20 archers; 10 Selkirk foresters; and 61 archers from Knaresborough forest. The numbers vary slightly on the different days.]

They were paid at Berwick-on-Tweed on 12th July; and again on 14th; at Selkirk on 25th July, after being reviewed at Middleham; at Peebles on 8th August, after review; at Cambusnethan on 18th

1301. 1230. [Anonymous.] The writer tells the K. he has shipped at Sept. 30. Berwick 2 good engines, the master engineer, and 6 carpenters, and bought 'cordes' and iron, and despatched the vessel 'this Friday,' Michaelmas day. She touches at Dunbar for the engine which he got ready for the K. after arriving at Berwick. He has delivered to Sir Hugh de Audeley to strengthen the Forest, 10 men-at-arms and 100 foot from Berwick, 10 men-at-arms and 20 foot from Roxburgh; and as Sir Thomas de Grey is no longer at Ayr with Earl Patrick, as he learns, he has told him to stay with his 'quart' with Sir Hugh, who has now in all 50 men-at-arms, with 6 from the sheriff of Peebles. He has also spoken with the sheriff of Roxburgh, the constable of Gedeworth, Sir Alexander de Balliol, and Sir Hugh, and

- EDWARD I. given them the K.'s instructions to send out scouts and each warn ——— the other and also the country. Sir Alexander de Balliol tells him 1301. whenever the enemy issue from Galloway, he will know two days before, and will warn the K. by two or three messengers of what road they take, and so will the others. He has divided 200*l.* of the fine made by Newcastle for the fifteenth, among the garrisons of Berwick, Roxburgh, Gedeworth, and the Forest, to his best judgment, for their 15 days' wages. Hopes to be with the K. this Tuesday, and would have come sooner, but for the late arrival of the money, on which the whole force of the Forest depended. He has not seen the sheriff of Peebles, who neither came nor sent an excuse, but he has told the other knights to give him the K.'s commands. If he himself had not come, all the garrisons on this side would have been scattered for want. The K.'s money from Exchequer came to Berwick on St Michael's eve at vespers, but not so much as he expected and should have had. This money he will bring with him. He has informed Sir John de Drokenesford as to the K.'s provisions at Berwick, i.e., how much has come from each county, and its condition, and charged him to collect as much as he can everywhere,
 'for your business in Scotland depends much on "vivres."' Has appointed Alexander le Convers to aid therein. He had ordered the sheriff of Northumberland to send him 12 carpenters and 12
 'maszons' to Berwick whom he might forward to the K. But has not yet got one. Written at Roxburgh, the last day of September, in

Oct. 3, 1236. To their liege lord the K., Montefyn de Noiellan constable of soon after. Newcastle-on-Ayr, Edmund de Mauleye sheriff, all the garrison there, and all the knights, people, men, and others of Kil and Conighame, who are at his peace. They inform him that on Tuesday, 3rd October, the Scots were in Carrick before the castle of Turnebyrs, with 400 men-at-arms and 'petail' enough, to damage it as much as they could; and within these eight days wished to attack Ayr castle and injure the country at the K.'s peace. Wherefore they beg the K. to send succours quickly, for the Scots are in such force that they and the other loyalists there cannot withstand them. They have heard nothing from Earl Patrick, to whom they understand the K.
 has given the keeping of the country; at which they wonder much.

Oct. 4. 1237. John de Kingestone to the K. Acknowledges his letters this Tuesday for the little engine 'Mountafui' and the 'espringaldes,' which he shipped to the K. on the day when Master Thomas Lengynour went away. William Jetour's men took them out, and put them in their own vessel, i.e., the engine and 2 espringaldes, one of which is in complete order, as Master Thomas told him; the other wants nothing but 'peil,' for which he has sent all through the country.
 The great engine is shipped to the K., but he knows nothing of its defects, having no engineer at hand to tell him. He has sent to the K., in William Jetour's vessel, 3 arblastes, one of 2 feet, 600 bolts for arblastes 'de tour,' and of 2 feet, and 2000 bolts for arblastes of 1 foot, and has removed the 'peil' of the espringal in the castle to

Inquisition [in] virtue of writ dated Westminster, 4th of same month, directing the Chancellor and Warden to inquire by what services a burgage and 4 'places' are held by Nicholas of Carlisle the king's sergeant in Berwick-on-Tweed, and whether 40 acres lying between said town and its fosse extending from the old place formerly of the Friars Preachers of Berwick outside the streets of Burghgate, Sutergate, and Sissergate towards . . . held by many men of the King at will, as in the time of the late Alexander King of Scotland, might be granted without damage, to Nicholas to hold of the King] held at Berwick-on-Tweed, on Monday next after the Feast of St James the Apostle, in the 30th year, before Sir Walter de Agmodesham chancellor in Scotland, Sir Edmund de Hastings

EDWARD I. warden of Berwick, and John Burdome sheriff thereof, by Philip of ——— Ridale, John of Baddeby, William of Orford, Simon of Dirlton, 1292. John Baudewyn, Peter le Cras, John of Corbridge, William of Roxburgh, Robert of Helmsleie, John of the Hall, Ralph of Bleclings, Hugh of Grendone, John of Hauburne, William of Knapptone, Thomas son of Ivetta, and John of Bartone; who say on oath that said Nicholas holds that burgage which was Ralph Phelipe's in Briggate street of Berwick, by extent made by the English burgesses of said town, viz., 4 marks per annum; also a vacant place on 'le Nesse' which was the Bishop of Moray's, by same extent, 3s. per annum; another vacant place on 'le Nesse' which was William the scriptor's, by same extent, 4s. per annum; also a burgage which was Henry of Stirling's on 'le Nesse,' extended ut supra at 2 marks per annum; and know of no more held by him. They say that these 40 acres between the town and the fosse were held in the late King Alexander's time by divers burgesses of Berwick freely without any reddendum, as pertinent of their burgages, and when said burgh was founded they were given to the burgesses to build, if any wished to do so, and there are streets in said ground arranged for this. But they are now held by divers burgesses of the King of England for yearly payment of 2s. an acre, under extent made by his bailiff, whereby each acre was extended at 12*d.*, and other services. These are Robert of Holande, William of Thorpe, John of Bartone, William of Brune, John of Appelby, Richard of Len, Richard of Foxholes, Walter of Agmodesham, Ferminus of Pontefract, Robert Heiron, John of St Botulph, John of Westone, Thomas del Bed, William Torald, Robert Pulter, Robert of Hecham, Ranulph of Holme, Peter le Cras, William le clerk, John Sparke, John Baudewyn, Reginald Lenginour, John of Corbridge, Thomas Michiel, Hugh of Grendon, Nicholas of Mark[ham] le Orfeure, Alexander le carpenter, John Packer, and Robert of Newcastle. That this ground cannot without the greatest injury to the King and the 'confusion and destruction' of the aforesaid town, be held 'integre' by Nicholas or any other; for he might build as good or a better town there than the present; and the burgesses have no other place within or without their town where they can have a handful of grass, or pasture, or any other easement, except these 40 acres, whereon all the burgesses both small and great have common pasture in open time by use and wont, and they are divided in small divisions as in the time of King Alexander, among the burgesses. And if the King's pleasure is that they should not be pertinents to the burgesses and their burgages, he may if he will increase his said town by 160 burgesses. The jurors append their seals. Shortly 1406. Robert de Kethe to the K. When he came to his peace before he gave him leave to hold the ward and marriage of the two daughters Martinmas of Andrew de Crawford, which he had bought from Sir John de Balliol then K. of Scotland. Prays him to confirm the same of his grace. Norman French.

(Endorsed) 'The K. gave it to Sir Nigel Cambel, but let the auditors
 ' deal with him, and if necessary call the Bishop of Dunblane if ' they can agree. If not, the K. is bound to Robert. The K. conferred
 ' the ward on Sir Nigel before Sir Robert's coming to his peace in the ' first war.'

[Attached is the following in same hand.]

At Dunfermline, about Martinmas, anno xxxi°, the said Robert prosecuted his petition. The K. appointed John de Britannia, Hugh le Despenser, John de Benstede, and . . . , auditors. The pleas for and against not discussed. For the auditors ex parte Regis prohibited Nigel from marrying the younger daughter till it should be discussed by the Council who should have the ward. But Nigel having married thereafter, was called before the Council for contempt. He asserted that the daughter was not in seisin at the date of the prohibition, and there was no contempt. The case remitted to a jury before the Guardian and Chamberlain, who shall certify the K. [Chancery Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 46.]

 Nov. 8. the 31st year, between Monsire Eymar de Valence lord of Mountignak, and Monsire Roberd le fuiz Paen, whereby the latter providing for him fitting and honourable equipment at the tourna-[1303.] 1409. Sir Robert de Kethe to the K. Prays him to give him

Circa entry to the land of Colbeynstoun (Covington) which he had granted Martin- him when he came to his peace. He bought it from two sisters co-
 mas. heirs, long before he was captured in the war. While he was in prison the K.'s servants gave these sisters in exchange,—to one 6 marks land in the K.'s demesne of Ratheu, to the other 6 marks of the farms of the town of Lanark. Their land of Colbeynstoun is only worth 13 marks 6s. 8d., so the whole profit to him is only 20s.  Nov. 18. of his inquiry into the diligence shewn by the sheriffs of Linlithgow and Edinburgh in procuring carpenters and ditchers under the K.'s commands. Says that none could be got for the day appointed at Stirling, for none would come unless by great dstraint and taken by force. For they say the K. owes them so much for the work at Linlithgow, that they prefer leaving the country to working for him. Requests to know his pleasure. Written at Edinburgh, 18th November. Inquisition at Lanark on Monday the morrow of St Thomas the Martyr 1303, by the K.'s command, in presence of Magnus de Stratherne and Nicholas de Benhathie, vicegerents of the Earl of Carrick sheriff of Lanark, by Patrick de Achenlek, Hugh de Galbrathe, Adam the Black, Adam of Dowan, William Casse, John son of the widow, William Crille, Adam the miller, David son of Adam, Laurence son of William, John Littil, John Cabok, jurors; who say that Sir John Comyn, grandfather of the present Sir John Comyn, gave the land of Dalserfe to Sir William de Galbrathe, in frank marriage with his daughter. It is held neither by ward and relief, nor any other service till the third heir. The said Sir William gave it to his son William in frank marriage with Lady Willelma, daughter of the late Sir William de Douglas; which 'said Williams' begot four daughters co-heiresses. Johanna the mother of Bernard de Cathe, was the eldest; to whom the demesne should belong, and was at the K.'s peace at her death at Candlemas 1301. Her mother Lady Willelma died after her daughter, in possession of the tenement, within the Feast of the Lord's Nativity 1302. They say that Dalserf was held of the late Sir John Comyn, and now of Sir Robert the Constable by the King's gift. The fourth part pays yearly 3*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* in all issues.

EDWARD I. 1421. The Bishop of Brechin 'in Scotland' prays the K. and council to command his chamberlain and other officers to allow him peaceable possession of his possessions, rents, 'canys,' and second tithes which his predecessors and himself enjoy by charters of the Kings of Scotland, which he will shew when required, and power to levy the said kains and tythes, within and without burgh; and to command the sheriffs of Forfar and Kincardine to answer and aid him and his bailiffs, as in the time of K. Alexander. [No date.] Norman French.

(Endorsed) He shews transcripts of K. Alexander's charters under the seals of the Bishops of St Andrews and Dunblane, viz., one of 9 marks in the K.'s domain of Bondington, and another of 18 marks 5s. 4d. of the farm of the burgh of Montrose (Monross) for the second tithes 'del Mernes.'

Fragment of seal, brown wax. A lion passant charged with a baton.

[1297-1303.] 1423. John del Breetut (?) the King's sergeant in the county of Dumfries, prays his grace and remedy. The K. gave him by charter the land of the late Aleyn le Cleirk of Dumfries, who died the K.'s enemy. One William of Penpont comes calling himself Aleyn's cousin and heir, and has a writ of seisin to inherit his land. Learning that Aleyn is bastard, so that he could not inherit, he waives his writ, and brings another in the name of one William Hauwyse who died 30 years before the war began, and claims as his cousin and heir, making no mention of Aleyn le Cleirk who was in seisin for more than 20 years. And as the writ of seisin is for people who were seised before the war, of lands then taken in the K.'s hand, and not to hinder (forbarrer) the writ of mortancestor concerning the death of people 30 or 40 years ago, and the people of these parts dislike any English disinheritor among them by the K.'s gift, so he prays the K.'s grace that he may take the land as the K.'s escheat by reason of the bastardy of the last 'feff.' [No date.] Norman French.

(Endorsed) To be spoken of with the K.'s council.

The K. does not intend that lands be restored by a writ of seisin of this sort, but only lands of which ancestors were seised in the beginning of the war, and occupied by reason of the war. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

[1297-1303.] 1424. The K. by his letters patent grants to his 'chier vadlet' Edward de Keith, all goods and chattels of whatever kind he may

EDWARD I. gain from Monsire Guilliam le Galeys (Wallace) the K.'s enemy, to ——— his own profit and pleasure. Provided however, that if said Edward 1303. by chance under colour of this gift takes anything from other people at the K.'s peace, he shall duly answer to those from whom such are taken. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. $\frac{459}{34}$.]

No place or date. A draft, slightly mutilated. The surname 'Keith' has been substituted for 'Brus.'

1425. Michael Jeofne of Sandwick, captain of the ships which came from that port to Scotland, in the K.'s service in the war, to the Treasurer. Monsire Eymer de Valence the K.'s lieutenant on this side the Scottish sea, in the 31st year, is due him by two writings, in a large sum for his own and his mariners' wages, and he has yet received nothing. He prays for a certificate of payment whether Monsire Eymer comes or not. Norman French.

(Endorsed) As Eymer de Valence is bound for the K. and his affairs touching the realm, the Council ordain that this writing be entered among the debts of which the Barons of the Cinque Ports are bound to acquit the K. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. $\frac{459}{100}$.]

1426. John le Tresur, vallet of the butelrie of Sir Edward the K.'s son, Prince of Wales, to the K. and council. The Prince having asked from the K. for the writer the office of the 'Guage' and 'Launage' beyond the Scottish sea, which K. Alexander was wont to give to one of his court for service rendered; and the K. having caused inquiry to be made by the guardian of that side, and it being found in the K.'s gift, and not worth more than 10*l.* 10*s.* 4*d.*, as by the inquests delivered to Sir Robert de Cotingham, he prays the office may be conferred on him. [No date.] Norman French.

(Endorsed) The 'Guageria' is found worth yearly 9*l.* 20*d.*, and the K. may give it and the 'Ulnacio' at his pleasure. The K.
 grants it at his son the Prince's request, during pleasure. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. $\frac{459}{58}$.]

1427. James de Dalileye, the K.'s escheator on this side the Scottish sea, complains that the Earl of Dunbar prevents him doing his office in the lands held of him, and levying the goods and chattels forfeited to the K. He is also hindered doing his office within the Lady de Vescy's manor of Sprouston; and the sheriffs of Berwick, Roxburgh, Dumfries, and Edinburgh interfere with him in drawing the rents and cultivating the lands forfeited, and as to goods and chattels of felons and enemies, notwithstanding the K.'s commandment to them under the Great Seal of Scotland, to aid him.
 [No date.] Norman French.

(Endorsed) The Earl of Dunbar and Lady de Vescy or their bailiffs to be written to under the Great Seal of England, to desist, and refund such goods and chattels as they have taken from their forfeited vassals. The various sheriffs also, under same seal, to cease

(Endorsed) The K. grants sufficient timber, and a writ to the Chamberlain of Scotland. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 4463.]

1429. John de Autry vadlet of the Earl of Lincoln, shews the K. and council, that whereas the K., at the earl's request, gave him by charter all the lands of Thomas du Boys in Scotland, on the day of 'Seynt Jak le Apostel' [25th July] in the K.'s 29th year [1301], when Thomas went against the K. in the Scottish war, and John was seised; the K. thereafter gave part thereof, viz., the manor of Ogilface (Uggelfas) in Linlithgowshire, to William Darde [Barde?] promising to give the petitioner the value elsewhere in Scotland; and prays the K. to give him such.

(Endorsed) The Guardian and Chamberlain to hear parties, and do justice. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 274.]

1430. Eufemia countess of [Ross?] to the K. Begs him, as one on whom all her hope and alleviation of her distresses depends, to aid her effectually in some matter depending between herself and William de Culy . . . h a native of his realm. Her son Sir W. will shew the K. on her behalf [the whole affair] without concealment of any kind. [No date.] [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 9146.]

Much mutilated and defaced.

1431. [To the K.] The [anonymous] writer says the Bishop of St Andrews is shewing people a letter under the K. of France's seal. He cannot tell the K. whether it is counterfeit or not. It asserts that there will be no peace between him and the K. of France if the Scots are not included. The people trust in this and the efforts of 'Mestre Baudre' their procurator at the Court of Rome. People say for certain that the bishop is at the bottom of the whole business. [No date.] Norman French. [Royal Letters, No. 2566.]

1432. Memorandum.—That the K. has expressly charged Sir John de Segrave, Robert de Clifford, and William le Latymer on their allegiance, that from their leaving Dunfermline with those appointed to attend them in this 'chivauchee' for 2 or 3 leagues from said town, they shall proclaim that none are to dare go with them except those in the underwritten indenture and their own 'mednee,' on pain of losing horses and arms, and imprisonment. And when these officers come to the water of Forth, they are to search strictly their followers, and if they find any strangers, to arrest them with horses and harness and send them after the K., certifying their names, and

- EDWARD I. how and where found, for the K.'s pleasure to be taken. And after ——— these officers pass the Forth, the K. wills, that in some convenient [1303.] place on this side 'les Torres,' they again search their company, and send all found beyond their proper number, with horses and harness, to the castles of Edinburgh (Puceles), or Berwick, whichever is nearest, and guard them till the K. signifies his pleasure. And the K. wishes all their followers on this 'chivauchee' to be warned of these instructions. 'And God give them life and health.' [No place or date.] [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

 Gourlay, Adam de Gourlay, Guy de Denhom, Henry del Whommes,

 Stounesleighe, Henry Scot, Adam de Crake, and Adam Grondy, who find that one Lady Johane de Vescy was lady of the half of the barony of Wilton, which she surrendered to K. Alexander by staff and baton; and the K. infeoffed Sir Thomas de Chartres and herself jointly. But they say they know nothing about the manner of such infeoffment, unless they see some muniment declaring it; they know there was such, but not its tenor. Sir Thomas died in Scotland

EDWARD I. beyond the Mountains, an enemy to the K., on Tuesday before the feast of St Andrew a year past. The said lady Johane died long before

[Transcript.]

'Letters patent by Maheu de Redeman declaring that as Malcolm of Terregles is due him 100 marks sterling by a recognizance in the K.'s chancery at St Andrews, payable by equal portions at Easter and Michaelmas next, he binds himself and his heirs, if Malcolm gives and enfeoffs him in the half of all lands, rents, and debts which he acquires by plea or otherwise in the county of Dumfries (provided he always goes by the granter's advice), to free him of the recognizance. Michaelmas, 1597. [Inquiry as to money in custody of Sir Hugh de Cressingand after. ham, missing after his death.]

The Treasurer having been given to understand that when Hugh de Cressingham left Berwick to go to Stirling castle, all his goods were left at Berwick with Robert Heron rector of Forde, and Hugh de Roubiri, and immediately after his death at Stirling, 400 marks of the K.'s money were sent by them to Werkworth castle and delivered to William de Toggesdene the constable, and also 48*l.* in a pouch, as to which last there is a dispute between Robert and Hugh, William was therefore ordered to appear at York before the Barons on the morrow of Michaelmas. On which day he appeared, and stated on oath that about 8 days after Hugh's death at Stirling, Hugh de Roubiri with his grooms only, brought two 'bulgia' covered with hide, and a coffer for harness sealed and locked, and asked him to keep them; wherein it was estimated there were 300*l.*, but the witness was informed by others there were 400*l.* They seemed to be of great weight, for William his son carried them from the great chamber of the castle to an adjoining closet; where they remained for 8 days, till Hugh de Roubiri and his grooms came and took them away, whither he knew not, but believed it was to Durlham. The Treasurer and Barons wishing to be better informed, resolved that Robert and Hugh should appear before them at York, the former on Thursday before S. Edmund K. and martyr's day [19th November], the latter on the morrow of St Clement [24th November], and writs for important business were accordingly issued. Robert, sworn and examined, said he was appointed to keep the K.'s coket at Berwick-

EDWARD I. on-Tweed, and received from the issues thereof 281*l*. For fear of ——— the Scots who had begun to rise against the K., and had killed the 1304. sheriff of Lanark, he, with Hugh de Roubiri's advice, put the money in two leather bags and two pouches, and sent them to Werkeworth castle about the F. of the Assumption of the B. Mary [August 15] before Hugh de Cressingham's death; and there in person delivered them to Hugh de Roubiri, who placed them in the treasury of the castle under safe custody of William de Toggesden the constable.
 After Cressingham's death, on Wednesday after the Nativity of the Virgin following, he (Robert) returned to Scotland in company of the barons who went in aid of the K. to put down the Scots, and received at Durham from Hugh the foresaid bags and money, whereof he delivered 100*l*. to Walter de Agmondesham for the K.'s affairs, and retained another 100*l*. till the Treasurer arrived, when he paid this sum at York by tallies. As to the remaining 81*l*., he says he has had none of it since. Asked if any of Hugh de Cressingham's money or goods came into his hands? says No. Asked if any such came to Hugh de Roubiri's hands? says, That he has heard that Cressingham had goods at the vill of Oerde which he held in lease, and Hugh de Roubiri drove them off after his death, how much he knows not. Asked if he brought or deposited any coffer at Werke-worth or saw Hugh de Roubiri do so? says No. Hugh de Roubiri appeared on his day, and deponed on oath that about the Gule of August in the year of Cressingham's death, at Robert Heron's request, he received from him in Werkeworth castle, two leather bags containing he believed 200*l*. or 300*l*., but knew not the exact sum, and likewise a pouch of canvas (or two) tied together by a strap, containing he understood about 35 marks. Immediately after Cressingham's death, for fear of the Scots, he carried the two leather bags and money to Durham castle, and afterwards delivered them to Robert when demanded. The two canvas pouches and money, with some jewels of his own, he stowed inside of a sack of his own wool at Werkeworth castle, and never saw the wool, silver, or jewels again; for the wool was sold, and the valuables and money removed by the keepers of the castle, and Robert fitz Roger's men, when he came there. Asked if he or Robert Heron brought a coffer for harness to Werkeworth before or after Cressingham's death and delivered it to be kept there? said No. Asked if any of Cressingham's other goods reached his hands? says No; but he himself delivered 40*s*. to one William de Stafford, Cressingham's bailiff in Scotland, to buy oxen for him, and the bailiff gave him to understand that 6 oxen were thus bought and lent to Cressingham at his manor of Orde; after whose death he took them away by the bailiff's order. That these were not Cressingham's property, unless in loan. [Exchequer, Q. R.

As to the alms—the K.'s pleasure is that the Chamberlain 'should do as in K. Alexander's time. Let him have a writ to the K.'s 'Lieutenant in Scotland to give him timber in the forest of Selkirk

EDWARD I. 'and Maddesleye to the number of 50 oaks.' [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 3839.]

[1304.] 1627. The said Bishop [of Glasgow] petitions the K., as he and his said town of Glasgow have been seised from time beyond memory, of toll from the burgesses of Rutherglen on all goods sold or bought in Glasgow, and they claim franchise under a new grant from the K., that he would permit him to distrain them in his said town to pay as heretofore.

(Endorsed) 'Let a writ issue to the Guardian and Chamberlain of Scotland to inquire into the facts and certify the K. at his next Parliament [these words cancelled], and warn the said burgesses of Rutherglen to appear and shew cause against the toll, if they see fit.' [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

No place or date. Has formed part of a series.

Rot. Parl. i. 467a. 1628. John de Dovedale, to whom the K. has given by charter Sir Nichol Cambel's lands in fee, as his son and heir is under age, begs that the K. will give him the ward of the infant's lands till majority, and his marriage. [No date.]

(Endorsed) 'The K. grants him the ward and marriage.' [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 2892.]

Rot. Parl. i. 469a. 1629. To our lord the K. prays his 'hoste' of Elgyn, Johan de Spauyding' chanon of Elgyn, that he would give him 20 oaks in his forest of Laund Morgund to build his church of Duffus, whereof he is canon.

1630. Alexander de Balliol his own liege bachelor, reminds the K. that after the battle of Falkirk (la Veyre Chapele) he gave him the land of Kirkepatrick in Galloway; before which he had given no land there, to Sir John de St John. But since after the 'good peace,' the K. gave Sir John de Balliol's Galloway lands to Sir John de St John, viz., Botle and others. And as Kirkepatrick is held in chief of Botle, Sir John claims it as an escheat, though the writer has been in seisin till now. Prays the K. to order a writ from Chancery to Sir John to desist molesting him. Norman French. [Tower Miscellaneous Rolls, No. 459.]

1631. William earl of Ros shews the King that as the 'foreign isles' of Scotland and their 'cheventeyns' were quite opposed and disobedient to King John, he commanded him to make war on them, wherein he spent 1000*l.* and more of his own, but took Louwhelan and the other chieftains and brought them to K. John's will; for which costs and expenses that King leased him in fee farm the lands of Dingwall (Dinggevaal) and Ferintosh (Ferincostri) at the same rent

EDWARD I. as in King Alexander's time. Wherefore he prays the King that he — may not lose them, as he only got them by gift as above, and not for [1304.] making war on the King who now is. [No date.]

(Endorsed) 'Inquiry to be made by the Lieutenant and Chamberlain
 'of Scotland as to the value of the lands and other circumstances of 'the business, and certify the King at next Parliament.' [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 7023.]

1632. Again the said earl having laboured in his ward under the King's commands, especially in these foreign isles, to do justice, and not yet had any allowance for himself or his servants, prays the K.
 for his pleasure in this matter. [No date.]

(Endorsed) 'Let him sue the Lieutenant and Chamberlain, to inquire as to these and certify the King.' [Parliamentary Petitions,
No. 7013.]

1633. John earl of Athol prays the K. to supersede his order to deliver the castle of Aboyne to Sir Alexander Comyn till he is better advised; for the land around it is savage and full of evil-doers, and the K. has no other fortress where the country or his servants may be in safety to keep the peace; and Sir Alexander has two of the strongest castles in the country already, viz., those of Urquhart (Orcharde) and Tarwedale, and may commit his prisoners to the castle of Aberdeen at pleasure. Besides, the Earl of Rosse and the Bishop of Rosse have informed the earl that Lochlan and his friends have ordered that each 'dawach' of land shall furnish a galley of 20 oars. Therefore it appears to the earl and others that it will not be good to deliver Aboyne castle to any till they see what Lachlan and his friends will do, the other castles named above being enough for Sir Alexander.

(Endorsed) 'The castle to remain till further orders. The K. thinks two are enough for Sir Alexander Comyn.' [Parliamentary Petitions,
No. 275.]

1634. William du Gardyn prays the K. and Council, as he was not in the first Scots war nor since, that he of his grace would grant him seisin of his land of Loughthwayt in Cumberland, not worth more than 5(?) marks yearly, which was taken in the King's hand in the said war when each sheriff of England had a writ to seize the lands of Scotsmen in his bailliary; for which at another time he petitioned in Parliament . . . and Sir John de St John was to make inquiry, but though he sued a writ nothing was done. [No date.]

1304-5. 1639. Inquisition [under the K.'s writ directed to William de Bevercote chancellor of Scotland, on the complaint of four merchants of St Omer, commanding same, dated Brustwyk, 23rd November previous] made at Berwick-on-Tweed, on Wednesday next after St Thomas the Martyr's day, anno xxxviii, in presence of the Chancellor, Robert Heron, and Master John de Westone, by Alan of Langeton [and eleven others], burgesses and merchants of Berwick. They found that one John Deudames bought for himself and other merchants of St Omer, in Moray in Scotland, certain goods which he stored in Pluscardyn Priory and other places in Moray awaiting his vessels. They were arrested by Master John de Westone and James de Dalilegh, because on their arrival in Moray they found the goods sequestrated in the Bishop of Moray's hands, as the said John who had been drowned in a shipwreck, had died intestate. So they took them in the K.'s hand and at his cost to Berwick, where they remain. These are, 32 sacks wool, value of each 60s.; 3 sacks of lambskins, value of each 2(?) marks; 36 dickers hides, each 11s.; a 'pisa' and a half of lard in a little pipe, 20s. Item, 3 'packells' of deerskins, value unknown, as they are almost rotten, and torn by rats.  ——— Scotland, and in presence of Sirs Henry de Beaumont, and Thomas 1305. de Grey, knights, and Robert de Balcolmi, attorneys of Isabella de Vesey, by Sirs Alexander de Abernethy, David de Bregghyn, Nicholas de la Hay, Constantin de Loghore, Alexander de Lamberton, Malise de Douary, Michael Scot, Mark de Clapham, Richard de Dunmore, Walter de Lundy, knights; Master Malcolm de Gatemilk, Thomas Skayre, John de Ambercrumby, Simon de Horok, Walter de Loghy, and Robert de Horok, jurors; who find that Alexander K. of Scotland father of the late K. Alexander, gave to Richard de Beaumont Isabella's ancestor, and his heirs, the barony of Crail (Caral) with its pertinents, by charter, wherein was contained a right of fishing or toll of 8*d.* from each last of herrings; and as some bailiffs wished to reckon salt herrings, to the merchants' damage, they made a fine to assess the quantity of tonnage in each ship by estimate of good men, which is now called 'Caan.' The said Richard pledged the manor to Walter then Steward of Scotland, who advanced him money for his journey to the Holy Land, and enjoyed the 'Caan' peacefully while he held the barony. After Richard and Walter's death, the barony fell into the late K. Alexander's hand, and was recovered from him by Walter's executors till the end of the lease. They say 'expressly' that K. Alexander father of the late King retained no part of said 'Caan.' The barony then remained in the late K.
 Alexander's hands for his life, as no sufficient heir appeared. John de Balliol then K., gave the barony and pertinents to Isabella as heir of Richard. One Theobald, Isabella's bailiff, leased the 'Caan' to Sir John de Cambhou for a term, who paid the rent for a year, whereon the said John K. of Scotland at the suggestion of some who said that it belonged to him, took possession of the 'Caan' at Candlemas 1295-96, drew the issues, and besides, at Easter following took the whole barony of Crail in his hands on account of the war, while Isabella for same reason sent no one to claim her 'Caan'; and so K. John remained in possession till K. Edward recovered Scotland.

- EDWARD I. 1681. Inquisition [under the K.'s writ to John de Segrave his ——— warden of Seotland on this side Forth, and John de Sandale his 1305. Chamberlain of Seotland, dated Westminster, 18th April previous] July 23. made at Selkirke on the morrow of St Mary Magdalene, anno xxxiii, before Sir John de Sandale, by John of Malkarstone, Henry Skynnere, Alexander of Hirdmanstone, William Colstan, Alan of Selkirke, Henry son of Hulle, Robert of the Grange, John Loghe, Aymer del Greneheued, Hugh Eyr, Robert Waltersmaghe, and Thomas son of Morin; who find that William formerly K. of Scotland gave the sheriffdom of Selkirke to one Andrew de Synton to be held by answering to the K. and his heirs for the issues, and being freed of the farm of the castle ward of Roxburgh and suit thereto, which he and his heirs were used to make for the barony of Synton.
 After Andrew's death, Alexander de Sinton his son and heir possessed it. After him one Andrew his son and heir entered and died seised,
 ' &c.' One Alexander de Synton entered as son and heir, and after his death, one Andrew de Synton, who, while he held it, was taken at the battle of Dunbar and sent to the castle of Fodringeye where he died in prison. Isabella the wife of Edward de Kethe is his sister and next heir. Append their seals at Selkirke, date ut supra.

Several fragments of small seals in white wax remain, one a figure on horseback.

Attached is a petition by Edward de Kethe and Isabella his wife to the K., praying that they may have the sheriffdom as found by the inquisition.

(Endorsed) 'Ostendant cartam et fiat eis justicia.' [*Chancery
 Miscellaneous Portfolios, No. 41.*]

- [1305.] 1682. [The Earl of Athol's petitions.]
 July (?). John earl of Athol prays the K. for seisin of his land of Lesnes in terms of the 'enqueste' made by the escheator, as the K.
 promised him his heritage both in England and Seotland.

(Endorsed 'Coram Rege. The Treasurer is commanded by a 'Chancery writ to compensate the Queen, and when the earl does
 'homage, he shall have his land.' [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 267.]

Again the said earl shows the K. that whereas he was . . . by the K. and Council to take from the town of Aberdeen, and the farms of Aboyne, Coule, and Mortleye(?), and of Botharime, which amount to 1200 marks, he has received nothing but 540*l.* . . . which he has spent in repairing the castles of Aberdeen and Aboyne, and . . .
 [retaining forces for one and other] to the number of 20 men-at-arms, and 40 sergeants on foot, . . . and was commanded by the K. to deliver the land of Mortleye(?) to the Earl of Buchan, the land of Coule to the Countess of Fife, and Sir Aymar de Valence holds the land of Botharime (?) . . . he prays that the K. would please to take some order regarding his sustenance under the said assignment.

(Endorsed) 'The K.'s pleasure is that Sir Aymar de Valence hold

EDWARD I. the land of Butharm, and the earl draw his fixed assignment from the Chamberlain of Scotland. [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 271.]

[Parliamentary Petitions, No. 263.]

Again the said Earl shews the K. that when he holds pleas of justice and 'bygames entrent' . . . the Bishop of Aberdeen's clerks relieve and demand the 'bygamete' out of the K.'s court, and say its cognisance belongs to them in the court of Christianity, and so they will have delivery; and when clerks are entered under indictment before the justiciar, so are they claimed by the clergy, when 'we' offer them the Book to read to know if they are clerks, the clergy 'say this pertains to them, and will not suffer them to answer before 'us.' And when clerks appear before him accused of many trespasses, who are 'borgois' or sons of 'borgois,' and clerks not accused of life or member, or touching testament or matrimony, the bishop's clerks come and claim them out of court, though they hold lay fees.

(Endorsed) 'The K.'s pleasure is that the franchises of the Crown be 'maintained in statu quo ante, till he ordains the affairs of Scotland.' [Parliamentary Petitions, No. 273.]

[The K.'s writ (in Norman French) appointing the justices to try the prisoners is engrossed, dated under the Privy seal at Laysingby, 30th July previous. The K.'s instructions to the justices, read openly in court by Sir Robert de le Warde, and dated at Laysingby, 1st August, are as follows:—]

That John de Seton be drawn and hanged, as the K. heard that he was at the death of Sir John Comyn; and Bernard de Mouhaut be also drawn and hanged, as he was at Roger de Tany's slaughter in Selkirk forest on his way to the K., then in his Scottish war, and also burned and destroyed Holy Church; and all the other prisoners to be hanged, as they bore arms against their liege lord the K. and are prisoners of war. And that a record be made of these treasons and felonies by one of the K.'s justices aforesaid in the form underwritten, and thereon judgment pronounced as ordained, and none of them be allowed to answer ('rescewe a respouns').

[The indictments and sentences.]

[1307.] 1926. To some high official. The writer gives him the news of his May 15. neighbourhood. He hears that Sir Robert de Brus never had the good will of his own followers or the people at large or even half of them so much with him as now; and it now first appears that he has right, and God is openly for him, as he has destroyed all the K.'s power both among the English and the Scots, and the English force is in retreat to its own country not to return. And they firmly believe by the encouragement of the false preachers who come from the host that Sir Robert de Bruys will now have his will. And these preachers are such as have been attached before the Guardian and the justices as abettors of war, and are at present freed on mainprise and carry themselves worse than before, boasting in their malice and deceiving the people thus by their false 'prechement.' For he believes assuredly, as he hears from Sir Renaud de Chien, Sir Doncan de Ferendraith, and Sir Gilbert de Glenkerni, and others who watch the peace both beyond and on this side of the Mountains, that if Sir Robert de Bruys can escape any way 'saun dreytes,' or towards the parts of Ros (Roos), he will find them all ready at his will more entirely than ever, unless the K. will be pleased to send more men-at-arms to these parts; for there are many people living well and loyally at his faith provided the English are in power, otherwise they see that they must be at the enemies' will through default of the K. and his Council, as they say. And it would be a deadly sin to leave them so without protection among enemies.
 And may it please God to keep the K.'s life, for 'when we lose him, which God forbid' (say they openly), all must be on one side, or they must die or leave the country with all those who love the K., if other counsel and aid be not sent them. For these preachers have told them that they have found a prophecy of Merlin, how after the death of 'le Roi Coueytous' the Scottish people and the Bretons shall league together, and have the sovereign hand and their will, and live together in accord till the end of the world. Begs his correspondent's pleasure in this and all other matters; and God keep him. Written at Forfar, 15th May. Norman French. [Chan-

 National MSS. of Scot. ii. No. viii. the meeting there of the Bishop of St Andrews, the Earls of Carrick, Buchan, ..., and Menteth, Sir John Comyn 'le fiz,' and the Steward of Scotland—their intention to have attacked Roxburgh—his spy's account of the dissensions among them caused by Sir David de Graham's demand for Sir William Wallace's lands and goods, as he was going abroad without leave—and his brother Sir Malcolm Wallace's objections, when these two knights gave each other the lie, and drew their knives—Sir John Comyn's taking the Earl of Carrick by the throat, and the Earl of Buchan seizing the Bishop of St Andrews—their final agreement that the Bishop of St Andrews, the Earl of Carrick, and Sir John Comyn should be Guardians of the realm, the first having custody of the castles as principal. That on same day [Wednesday previous] they all left Pebbles, the Earl of Carrick and Sir David de Brechin going to Annandale and Galloway, the Earl of Buchan and Comyn to the north of Forth, the Steward and the Earl of Menteth to Clydesdale. The Bishop of Chester went to Ayr, Monday before Pentecost [8th May], to see as to victuals, &c., accompanied by Sir Edmund de Maulay, to be constable of the castle, and John de Somersete as receiver of the victuals from Ireland and England.
